(2) To charge unlawful arrest without legal process, only arrest without process, imprisonment, and damages need be alleged, as imprisonment is presumed to be unlawful and burden rests on defendants to allege and prove its lawfulness or justification.

Cal.—Kaufman v. Brown, 209 P.2d 156, 93 C.A.2d 508.

Failure to allege arrest by officers without warrant

Count of complaint, alleging that defendant prohibition administrator directed that plaintiff be held, without charging direction to hold him without warrant, stated no cause of action for false imprisonment, since there is a presumption, which prevails in the absence of a pleading to the contrary, that officers perform their duties legally.

False assertion of authority

Although a petition for false imprisonment failed to aver in so many words that plaintiff had committed no offense in the presence of the officer, or that the latter had no reasonable grounds for believing him guilty of a felony, it was sufficient to state a cause of action where it did charge that the officer falsely asserted that plaintiff had committed a breach of the peace in his presence and wrongfully arrested him for that reason, the court saying: "In view of the specification of the very ground upon which the deputy constable assumed to act, it was necessary to negative only that particular assertion of authority."

Required additional allegations

Petition alleging that arresting officers had been guilty of false imprisonment for failure to take arrested person before magistrate forthwith was fatally defective in failing to state that magistrate was available at time plaintiff was arrested, or that plaintiff was in condition to be presented before magistrate, or length of time plaintiff was held before being taken before magistrate, or day or week on which arrest was made.

Allegations of false charges

(1) Allegations of false charges, together with the claim of resulting arrest and confinement, are sufficient to constitute a claim for false imprisonment, the gist of which is unlawful detention.

Alaska.—Wilson v. Eberle, 15 Alaska 260.

presumption that the imprisonment was unlawful, it is unnecessary specifically to aver the conclusion that the restraint was illegal, unlawful, or without competent authority.⁶⁴

A mere allegation that plaintiff was discharged on the criminal trial for lack of sufficient cause to believe him guilty is not a sufficient averment to show that imprisonment was illegal or without a warrant,⁶⁵ and it is unnecessary to allege the result of a prosecution in the course of which plaintiff claims to have been falsely imprisoned.⁶⁶

Lawful arrest and unlawful detention. Where the arrest is legal, the complaint should allege a wrongful detention.⁶⁷ On the other hand, if the complaint sufficiently avers an unlawful detention after an arrest, it need not aver that the arrest itself was unlawful.⁶⁸

the complaint that plaintiff was restrained under process, it must be shown by the allegations that such process was void⁶⁹ or illegal.^{69.5} In an action against an officer, where the complaint shows that the imprisonment was under process, plaintiff must set out in his complaint the fact that the warrant was irregular on its face.⁷⁰

Where the complaint itself affirmatively discloses the apparent validity of the process and proceedings, it does not state an action for false imprisonment;⁷¹ nor is a cause of action alleged if the complaint asserts that the restraint was under process not appearing to be void.⁷² Therefore, it can be said that, while it is not necessary to allege that the arrest was unlawful where no judicial proceeding was had, it is necessary to allege the facts constituting the invalidity of such proceeding where one was employed.^{72.5} An allegation that a warrant was issued without probable cause does not, with-

Arrest at home while asleep

A complaint, alleging that plaintiffs, husband and wife, were arrested in the nighttime while sleeping together in the bedroom of their home, was sufficient to show the lawfulness of their conduct at the time of their arrest, and the consequent unlawfulness of their arrest and detention, and to require defendants to justify.

(2) General allegations that defendants caused and procured plaintiff's arrest in conjunction with allegation that arrest was made after a magistrate had ordered a complaint were insufficient to state a cause of action for unlawful arrest and false imprisonment, in that they did not disclose whether arrest was under valid process or by police officer at instigation and procurement of defendants.

Allegations held insufficient

Complaint which did not allege that warrant served on plaintiff by defendant was not valid on its face did not state a cause of action for false imprisonment; and allegations that officers knew plaintiff was represented by counsel, that no attempt was made to serve his counsel with amended complaint filed against him, that no notice was given that plaintiff should appear or post bail, and that court never revoked its order releasing plaintiff on his own recognizance, only stated matters affecting proceedings leading up to issue of warrant of arrest, and did not state a cause of action.

Want of jurisdiction. Where the alleged wrongful detention is pursuant to process, facts must be stated showing that it is extrajudicial⁷⁴ or without jurisdiction.⁷⁵ It is insufficient to allege merely that the court or defendant had no jurisdiction,⁷⁶ or that imprisonment under the guise of judicial action was unlawful and void.⁷⁷

A complaint which standing by itself contains sufficient allegations of facts to establish that a warrant on which defendant was arrested was invalid may be so qualified by statements made by plaintiff's counsel in his opening that the cause of action must be dismissed. However, where a complaint sets up two causes of action based on two separate warrants and the opening statement relates only to one of such causes of action, the complaint should not be dismissed as to both causes, although the facts as to the invalidity of the warrants on which the causes of action were based are alleged in identical terms, and plaintiff should be permitted to go to trial on the other cause of action.⁷⁸

Exemption from arrest. A declaration which does not allege a privilege or exemption from arrest, when the arrest complained of was made on process regular on its face, is not sufficient to sustain an action for false imprisonment.⁷⁹

(3) Defendant's Responsibility for Unlawful Detention

In an action for false imprisonment the complaint must sufficiently allege the defendant's responsibility for the unlawful restraint.

In an action for false imprisonment the complaint should allege the personal participation of defendant in the unlawful imprisonment or otherwise set forth facts showing his responsibility therefor.⁸⁰

Allegations held sufficient

Allegations, in defendant's counterclaim for damages for alleged false arrest, that plaintiffs falsified evidence by testifying that defendant had committed an assault on one of the plaintiffs, when, in fact, plaintiff's injuries were caused by an unavoidable accident, alleged sufficient facts to overcome prima facie showing of probable cause for defendant's arrest.

Judicial immunity not applicable

Where complaint of plaintiff for false arrest and imprisonment alleged that city judge in committing plaintiff to the county jail acted without any jurisdiction whatever, the doctrine of judicial immunity could not be applied as a matter of law.

N.Y.—Koepp v. City of Hudson, 95 N.Y.S.2d 700, 276 App.Div. 443.

Imprisonment on contempt charge

(1) To state cause of action for false imprisonment arising out of imprisonment on contempt charge, it is incumbent upon plaintiff to allege matter affirmatively showing want of jurisdiction in court which rendered judgment.

Mo.—Thompson v. Farmers' Exchange Bank, 62 S.W.2d 803, 333 Mo. 437.

(2) Complaint charging, in effect, that contempt proceedings against plaintiff were based on an oral order of court which was never reduced to writing and entered, that plaintiff was never placed on probation and that county probation officer had, without authority, issued warrants of commitment for detention of plaintiff who had been found guilty of contempt of court, contained all essential allegations to charge defendant with false imprisonment.

N.J.—Lakutis v. Greenwood, 87 A.2d 23, 9 N.J. 101.

(3) Allegations that judge was not acting in his capacity as such and that there was no session of court or formal proceeding pending before judge were sufficient to state a cause of action; and word "arbitrarily" added nothing to declaration count. Mass.—Joyce v. Hickey, 147 N.E.2d 187.

A complaint for false imprisonment otherwise sufficiently alleging defendant's participation in plaintiff's false imprisonment need not allege that defendant was plaintiff's jailer⁸¹ or a deputy sheriff.^{81.5} When an officer is liable for an illegal arrest made by his deputy without a warrant only where the arrest is made on charge of felony, a complaint for false arrest sufficiently avers that the charge was a felony where it sets forth facts from which the inference of felony conclusively appears.⁸²

Acts of employees. Where an employer is sued for a false imprisonment alleged to have been committed by his employee, the complaint should aver the relation of employer and employee and the committing of the imprisonment by the employee while

Two alternatives

To support a judgment for damages for false imprisonment the plaintiff must plead one of two things, either that the defendant made the unlawful arrest and participated in the unlawful restraint or that the defendant affirmatively instigated, encouraged, or caused the unlawful arrest.

U.S.—Burlington Transp. Co. v. Josephson, C.C.A.S.D., 153 F.2d 372.

Authorization or direction of arrest

(1) A complaint in an action for false arrest, failing to allege that defendant authorized or directed the arrest of plaintiff without a warrant, was insufficient in law.

N.Y.—Luhan v. Slavik, 185 N.Y.S. 878, 194 App.Div. 728.

(2) A complaint is insufficient if plaintiff does not allege that defendant had any authority to direct police officers as to what they should or should not do in making search of premises or in their treatment of plaintiff during search.

U.S.—Manaro v. Rosenberg, C.A.III., 231 F.2d 305, certiorari denied 76 S.Ct. 1039, 351 U.S. 970, 100 L.Ed. 1489.

Concealment causing arrest

Where a petition for false imprisonment brought against a bank because of the arrest and confinement of plaintiff on a charge of negotiating a bad check was based on the alleged fraud of the bank in failing to disclose the full facts, which disclosure would have prevented plaintiff's arrest, the petition did not set forth a cause of action for false imprisonment against the bank where it failed to show the bank's duty to speak, and the absence of allegations to the effect that the bank sought or procured the arrest was fatal to the petition.

Mo.—Richardson v. Empire Trust Co., 94 S.W.2d 966, 230 Mo.App. 580.

Confinement in insane asylum

(1) A complaint charging that city magistrate and physicians conspired to fix on plaintiff stigma and disability of mental unsoundness, that plaintiff was confined in state hospital for insane under statutory certificates of physicians that plaintiff "was in need of treatments," and that county paid for plaintiff's board, stated no cause of action for false imprisonment against county, nor did it state a cause of action against magistrate, since he was not connected with plaintiff's confinement to hospital or against physicians, notwithstanding certificates were insufficient, since risk of proceeding thereon was on those in charge of hospital.

(2) Declaration alleging that defendant, who was a physician, maliciously and in bad faith executed and signed a certificate for commitment of individuals to state institutions for the insane, when defendant knew or should have known that plaintiff was sane, was insufficient to allege a cause of action for false imprisonment, since one who procures confinement of another on lawful process is not liable, although he caused process to issue by means of false statements.

Mass.—Mezullo v. Maletz, 118 N.E.2d 356, 331 Mass. 231.

Allegations held sufficient

(1) To charge direct participation in unlawful arrest and confinement, as against contention that merely a conspiracy was alleged against defendants.

Tex.—Castillo v. Canavati, Civ.App., 152 S.W.2d 785, error refused.

(2) To show sheriff's responsibility for arrest and imprisonment by his deputy.

Ariz.—Miles v. Wright, 194 P. 88, 22 Ariz. 73, 12 A.L.R. 970.

(3) To amount to an allegation that defendants, through their agent, procured or directed plaintiff's arrest.

Ga.—Webb v. Prince, 9 S.E.2d 675, 62 Ga.App. 749.

Allegations held insufficient

(1) Complaint which alleged that plaintiff was arrested by two police officers without a warrant after defendant, who was plaintiff's former employer, had complained to police of alleged theft, and which further alleged that defendant had accompanied officers, was insufficient to state cause of action, in absence of any allegation that defendant knew that officers did not have the necessary warrants.

U.S.—Manaro v. Rosenberg, C.A.III., 231 F.2d 305, certiorari denied 76 S.Ct. 1039, 351 U.S. 970, 100 L.Ed. 1489.

(2) Complaint against building inspector was insufficient, by reason of affirmatively showing that sheriff rather than defendant had arrested and imprisoned plaintiff.

Cal.—Dawson v. Martin, 309 P.2d 915, 150 C.A.2d 379.

(3) Allegation in complaint for damages for false imprisonment that chief of police had in effect ratified, condoned, and abetted actions of other individual police officers amounting to false imprisonment of plaintiff was insufficient as statement that chief had directed such acts or had personally co-operated in the false imprisonment in such manner as to make him liable for damages therefor.

Cal.—Oppenheimer v. City of Los Angeles, 232 P.2d 26, 104 C.A.2d 545.

81. Or.—Knight v. Baker, 244 P. 543, 117 Or. 492.

Active participants

Allegations that a prosecuting attorney and a deputy sheriff actively participated in the unlawful arrest and imprisonment of plaintiff were sufficient to show their responsibility therefor even though it appeared that a third person acted as his jailer.

Mo.—Burton v. Drennan, 58 S.W.2d 740, 332 Mo. 512.

81.5 Matter of defense

If person making arrest was a deputy sheriff, that fact was a matter for his defense in action for false imprisonment.

82. Ariz.—Miles v. Wright, 194 P. 88, 22 Ariz. 73, 12 A.L.R. 970.

Stealing "large sum of money"

The complaint on a sheriff's bond based on an arrest by his deputy of plaintiff without a warrant sufficiently states, as against a general demurrer, that the offense was a felony, by allegation that he arrested her on a charge of having stolen "a large sum of money."

Ariz.—Miles v. Wright, supra.

acting within the scope of his employment.⁸³ An averment to the general effect that defendant's agent committed the false imprisonment as an agent or employee of defendant and while acting within the scope of his employment is sufficient,⁸⁴ and it is unnecessary to add the further allegation that the imprisonment was committed in the interests of the master,⁸⁵ or that the principal aided in or ratified the false imprisonment.⁸⁶ As against a general demurrer a complaint in an action against a corporation is sufficient which shows that the warrant on which a false imprisonment is alleged was issued by the agent of the corporation and with its knowledge and connivance.⁸⁷

Conspiracy between joint defendants. In an action against joint defendants it is unnecessary to allege that the acts of defendants were "wilful and concerted," etc., since it is not generally necessary to make out a conspiracy to maintain an action for false imprisonment,⁸⁸ although where a conspiracy is an essential part of the joint participation of defendants it must be alleged.⁸⁹

(4) Malice and Want of Probable Cause

In an action for false imprisonment the complaint ordinarily need not allege either the presence of malice or the want of probable cause.

Where malice or want of probable cause is not an essential element of the cause of action for false imprisonment, under the rules discussed supra § 7, it is not necessary for plaintiff to allege either the

Store customer

Petition, filed by customer in defendant's store, who was searched by police officers after an employee of defendant called them and informed them that a man was holding a gun on another employee and after their arrival pointed to customer as the man, stated a cause of action predicated on theory of false arrest, or on theory of defendant's failure to protect plaintiff as a customer, lawfully on defendant's property, from injury caused by misconduct of defendant's employee.

Ga.—Jacobs v. Owens, 99 S.E.2d 895, 96 Ga.App. 318.

Carrier

(1) In action against railway company, allegation that "defendant by and through its agents or servants, to wit . . . who were acting in line of duty or scope of their authority as such agents, imprisoned plaintiff without legal warrant," sufficiently charged the railway with legal responsibility for unlawful detention.

Ala.—Southern Ry. Co. v. Beaty, 103 So. 658, 212 Ala. 608.

(2) As a carrier is an insurer of the safety of its passengers against ill treatment by its servants, it is not necessary to allege that its agent in charge of a train was acting within the scope of his authority in causing the arrest of a passenger.

Ark.—Moore v. Louisiana & A. R. Co., 137 S.W. 826, 99 Ark. 233, 34 L.R.A., N.S., 299.

(3) Petition which alleged that defendant had restrained plaintiff of his personal liberty by compelling him to remain in his seat aboard pullman car, sufficiently alleged cause of action for false imprisonment.

Mo.—Hays v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 304 S.W.2d 800.

(4) Complaint, which alleged that plaintiffs had notified some unidentified uniformed agent of railroad of fact that plaintiffs were being transported under extradition warrant which contained errors which were pointed out to such person who disregarded plaintiffs' protest, and which failed to allege an assault or undue violence on part of any employee of the railroad, failed to state cause of action against railroad for damages for unlawful detention.

U.S.—Picking v. Pennsylvania R. Co., D.C.Pa., 3 F.R.D. 425, reversed on other grounds, C.C.A., 151 F.2d 240, rehearing denied 152 F.2d 753.

(5) In action by passenger against carrier and its agent for violation of carrier's duty to protect passenger from insult, injury, and mortification, pleadings, which revealed that passenger's arrest and prosecution under warrant taken out by agent was the result of agent's personal grievance, but which expressly disclaimed that the action was one for false imprisonment or malicious prosecution, failed to state cause of action against carrier for breach of its duty or against agent for malicious prosecution or false imprisonment, regardless of allegation that agent acted willfully and wantonly and without justification.

Averments as to scope of authority

(1) Counts of declaration in action for false imprisonment and malicious prosecution, alleging that it was duty of defendant corporation's store manager to guard defendant's interests against passing of spurious coin and other misdemeanors liable to result in monetary loss to defendant and that, acting as such manager, he falsely pronounced bill, tendered by plaintiff in payment for goods purchased, counterfeit and caused her to be detained in store and given into policeman's custody, were not demurrable as failing to show that manager was acting within scope of his authority.

(2) In malicious prosecution and false imprisonment action against apartment house desk clerk and manager and their corporate employers, complaint sufficiently charged apartment house desk clerk and manager had implied authority to cause arrest of plaintiff on disorderly conduct charge.

presence of malice⁹⁰ or the absence of probable cause.⁹¹ An allegation of malice may form a basis for an aggravation of damages but it does not relate to the cause of action,⁹² and an allegation of malice in procuring a detention is not of itself sufficient to show that the detention was unlawful.⁹³

Where the gist of the action on fair interpretation of the whole pleading is false imprisonment, an allegation as to want of probable cause is immaterial,⁹⁴ and may be disregarded as surplusage,⁹⁵ although it has been held that a complaint is sufficient which merely states that at a specified time and place defendant imprisoned plaintiff without probable cause.⁹⁶

Allegations of malice and want of probable cause will not of necessity change the action into one for malicious prosecution⁹⁷ or render the pleading invalid.⁹⁸ However, where the complaint sets forth an arrest maliciously and without probable cause, imprisonment, and acquittal, and does not allege absence of a warrant or irregularity or illegality in a warrant, it shows that malicious prosecution and not false imprisonment lies.⁹⁹ On the other hand, the allegation of absence of probable cause does not convert trespass quare clausum fregit into false imprisonment.¹

Malicious prosecution and false arrest. Where a plaintiff sues for a malicious prosecution and a false arrest he must allege both malice and want of probable cause, and it has been said that a general allegation that a prosecution was malicious and without probable cause is not a mere conclusion but is sufficient as an averment of an ultimate fact.²

(5) Damages

In an action for false imprisonment general damages need not be specifically set forth, but no recovery may be had for items of special damages unless they are particularly alleged.

Under the rules applicable to pleading damages generally, discussed in Damages §§ 129-140, in an action for false imprisonment general damages need not be specially pleaded,³ but allegations of special damages may be pleaded in support of general dam-

a. In General

The plea or answer should conform to the general rules of pleading and statutory provisions. Affirmative defenses should be specially pleaded.

General rules relating to the plea or answer in civil actions usually apply in actions for false imprisonment.¹⁶ Under some statutes and rules of the court defendant may file a general denial only when he intends in good faith to controvert all of the allegations of the complaint, but must otherwise specially deny the allegations which he intends to controvert admitting the truth of the other allegations.¹⁷ The replication may cure a defect in the answer.¹⁸

Affirmative defenses. Defendant ordinarily must plead specially matter in confession and avoidance of a charge of false imprisonment, as discussed infra § 54. A special plea setting up matter provable under the general issue is demurrable.¹⁹

A notice accompanying the general issue will not be dismissed on the ground that it contains no matter of defense not provable under the general issue and contains immaterial and prejudicial statements of fact.²⁰

b. Sufficiency of Pleas as to Avoidance or Justification

- (1) In general
- (2) Legal authority or process
- (3) Arrest without process

(1) In General

In an action for false imprisonment a plea or answer which seeks to justify the detention should allege facts constituting a justification and should set them forth clearly and in such a way as to identify the imprisonment justified with that charge.

General rules usually apply in testing the sufficiency of a plea or answer in avoidance or justification of a charge of false imprisonment.²² A plea of justification is bad where the facts set forth fall short of showing that the conduct of defendant was lawful.²³ Such a plea should set forth the facts of justification so that plaintiff may be informed of them and the court may judge as to their sufficiency,²⁴ and should do so without duplicity.²⁵ It must sufficiently identify the arrest or imprisonment justified as that alleged in the complaint.²⁶

When the complaint alleges that plaintiff was imprisoned on more than one charge, an answer justifying the arrest on only one of the charges is bad.²⁷ A plea which professes to answer the whole declaration, but omits to justify the detention of plaintiff during some portion of the time, is bad.²⁸ A plea justifying the arrest or imprisonment of plaintiff on the ground that defendant was an officer at the time need not answer such matters set out in the declaration as would have given plaintiff a good cause of action against a private person.²⁹

An answer which denies an allegation of want of probable cause for arrest is not bad as failing to present an issue, although it admits the arrest was made without complaint or warrant, there being no inference that it was not a proper case for arrest without warrant.³⁰ A denial of charges as to the abuse and harsh treatment of plaintiff is broad enough to include an injury from the defective condition of a cell in which plaintiff was confined.³¹

25 C.J. p 537 note 76.

22. Denial of matters necessary to complete defense

An affirmative defense, consisting of new matter, under Code Civ.Proc. § 500, authorizing such defenses, should be based on the theory of confession and avoidance, and a denial has no place therein, except as to some matter of fact which must be denied to complete the defense; therefore, in determining the validity of the defense, all allegations of the complaint will be considered admitted, if not traversed by a denial in the defense, although traversed by separate denials.

N.Y.—Mulinos v. Walkof, 159 N.Y.S. 16, 95 Misc. 165.

Plea or answer held sufficient

(1) Answer averring arrest for operating automobile at excessive speed was sufficient on general demurrer. Utah.—Oleson v. Pincock, 251 P. 23, 68 Utah 507.

(2) In action for false imprisonment, answer alleging that plaintiff was guilty of obtaining or attempting to obtain property by false personation, and that acts were performed for protection of property and to obtain return thereof, sufficiently showed that plaintiff's detention for crime of personation was in defense of defendants' property.

Mo.—Teel v. May Department Stores Co., 176 S.W.2d 440, 352 Mo. 127.

Plea or answer held insufficient

(1) In action against county judge for false imprisonment for contempt, answer alleging that punishment for contempt was solely for disobedience of court's order would not support a judgment for defendant on ground that plaintiff had been guilty of contempt in that he had used disrespectful and insolent language in the presence of court.

Ky.—Casteel v. Sparks, 226 S.W.2d 533, 312 Ky. 99.

(2) Allegations of fraud and deceit and of nonfeasance were insufficient as defenses to plaintiff's causes for false arrest and malicious prosecution, since they did not purport to show that plaintiff's action was not maintainable or to show avoidance.

Plea showing unlawful delay by arresting officer

A plea in false imprisonment action that officer arrested plaintiff on suspicion of having committed a felony and detained him for one and one-half hours while investigation establishing innocence was made, whereupon plaintiff was discharged, was bad, since it was officer's duty to bring plaintiff before magistrate without unreasonable delay, as statute authorizing officer to discharge person detained when no ground for criminal complaint exists was inapplicable because it applies only to arrests made for offense committed in view of officer or person apprehended in act by any other person. false imprisonment is based on the failure to bring plaintiff promptly before a magistrate after his arrest, as discussed supra §§ 30, 31, the facts excusing the delay must be specifically alleged in a plea of justification.³²

(2) Legal Authority or Process

In an action for false imprisonment a plea or answer justifying the restraint by legal authority must set forth all facts essential to show the validity of the process or power invoked.

A pleading justifying the detention by legal authority must set forth all facts essential to the validity of process or power of a court.³³ An allegation that defendant was at the time of the acts charged a justice of the peace is a sufficient allegation of his official character.³⁴

(3) Arrest without Process

A plea of justification for an arrest and restraint without process must set forth the facts relied on as authority for such an arrest and restraint.

A plea in justification of an arrest without process must set forth, with sufficient detail, all facts necessary to the defense.³⁵ A plea justifying arrest on the ground of probable cause for suspecting plaintiff to be guilty of the offense for which he was imprisoned must state the reasons for such suspicion,³⁶ and mere allegations of reasonable and probable cause are insufficient.^{36.5} A plea that plaintiff committed the act for which he was arrested in the presence of a police officer is sufficient, and the officer's power to make the arrest is not affected by the fact that defendant advised him to do so.³⁷

c. Effect of Plea of Avoidance or Justification

A plea of justification admits the fact of detention but does not admit that the detention was wrongful.

A plea of justification admits the detention of plaintiff,³⁸ and where plaintiff is detained without a warrant, defendant, in order to overcome the prima facie case thus made, must plead facts, such as the commission of a crime in the presence of defendant or his agent, justifying the detention.³⁹ However, a plea of justification does not admit that the imprisonment was wrongful.⁴⁰ By such plea defendant becomes entitled to the privileges of one holding the affirmative of the issue.⁴¹

d. Mitigation of Damages

It is proper for the defendant to plead matter in mitigation of damages, such as the absence of malice on his part or the commission by the plaintiff of a crime other than that for which he was imprisoned.

Defendant in his answer may properly plead facts in mitigation of damages;⁴² this is true although the mitigation is only as to a part of the violence committed,⁴³ and even if the complaint states facts entitling plaintiff to exemplary damages.⁴⁴ An allegation that there were no damages is equivalent to a denial of damages and is not properly pleaded as an affirmative defense⁴⁵ or a partial defense.⁴⁶ An offense independent of the one for which the arrest complained of was made, but associated with it, may be pleaded not by way of justification but by way of mitigation of damages.⁴⁷

Absence of malice. Defendant, although he has been guilty of causing the illegal imprisonment of plaintiff, may allege and prove in mitigation of damages facts tending to show that what he did

§ 53. Replication or Reply

General rules relating to replications or replies usually apply in actions for false imprisonment.

General rules governing replications or replies ordinarily apply in actions for false imprisonment.⁵¹ A replication to a plea of judicial authority to make the arrest is demurrable if it fails sufficiently to allege facts destroying the validity of such authority.⁵² A replication to the plea of justification which denies that the justification claimed by defendant covers all the trespasses set forth in the declaration is substantially a traverse in the form of a declaration, and is demurrable.⁵³ A replication to a plea setting up a warrant as justification, which avers that defendant retained the warrant until too late to reach the place at which the court was being held until after its adjournment, is bad unless it sets up such facts as would render defendant liable for abuse of process under a new assignment.⁵⁴

- d. Variance

a. Issues

The issues in an action for false imprisonment are confined to those raised by the pleadings. A general denial raises the whole issue on the complaint, but affirmative defenses must be specially pleaded.

The issues in an action for false imprisonment are confined to those raised by the pleadings.⁵⁵ No issue is raised if there is no question about a fact which is pleaded and admitted in evidence;^{55.5} but a claim for punitive or exemplary damages is properly in the case, although not explicitly pleaded, where the complaint alleges willful, malicious, and wrongful imprisonment.^{55.10} In the absence of such allegations^{55.15} or of setting forth facts from which such elements may be inferred,^{55.20} no question of exemplary damages is involved in the case.

Defendant's general denial in a false imprisonment action raises the whole issue on the complaint, including the force or lack of force used in effecting the restraint and the general circumstances;⁵⁶ but where the general denial is followed by special pleas which are a proper part of the statement of the defense, such pleas do not broaden the issues or the theory of recovery.^{56.5}

A general denial does not raise special defenses and some authorities regard justification as new matter which must be specially pleaded and as unavailable under the general issue.⁵⁷ The general

issue or general denial goes merely to the fact of an arrest or imprisonment and defendant's participation therein;⁵⁸ and, if defendant fails to plead justification for an alleged false imprisonment, the sole issue under the pleadings is whether plaintiff has in fact been falsely imprisoned and, if so, the amount of damages.⁵⁹

b. What Must Be Proved

Plaintiff must prove all of the essential allegations of his complaint, but ordinarily he need not prove matters which are not essential to the cause of action although, according to some authorities, he is obligated to prove an unnecessary allegation of malice or want of probable cause.

Plaintiff must prove every essential allegation of his complaint not admitted or deemed admitted by defendant.⁶⁰ Ordinarily he need not prove matters which are not essential to the cause of action,⁶¹ such as a conspiracy.^{61.5} In some jurisdictions it is sufficient to show that the imprisonment was unlawful.^{61.10} Where a complaint alleges conjunctively an unlawful arrest "and" imprisonment, it has been held that proof of both is essential to recovery.⁶²

Malice and want of probable cause. Malice and want of probable cause usually are not essential elements of the cause of action for false imprisonment, as considered supra § 7, and according to some authorities an unnecessary allegation of malice or want of probable cause need not be proved by plaintiff.⁶³ Therefore, where plaintiff pleads malice as a basis for a recovery of exemplary damages, he need not prove the averment thereof in order to recover actual damages.⁶⁴ However, there is authority for the view that where a plaintiff unnecessarily alleges malice or want of probable cause in a false imprisonment action he must prove such allegation.⁶⁵

c. Evidence Admissible under Pleadings

Evidence should conform to the pleadings, and a plaintiff who has not pleaded special damage may not introduce evidence thereof. Under a general denial defendant may adduce evidence controverting the case made by plaintiff, but evidence of matters in confession and avoidance is ordinarily inadmissible unless specially pleaded.

As a general rule the proof, as in actions generally, considered in Pleading §§ 524-530, must correspond with, and be confined to, the issues raised by the pleadings.⁶⁶ If defendant admits the

Character

(1) Where plaintiff in action for false imprisonment alleged that because thereof he had suffered great humiliation and shame, that he was of a sensitive nature and highly prized the good name he had borne among his acquaintances, and the defendants generally denied such allegations, nature of the suit was such that plaintiff's character was at issue and plaintiff was entitled to offer evidence of his good character.

Tex.—Fort Worth Hotel Co. v. Waggonman, Civ.App., 126 S.W.2d 578, error dismissed, judgment correct.

(2) Complaint for false arrest and imprisonment alleging pain of body and mind, humiliation and embarrassment as damages, and general denial, made humiliation, embarrassment and pain of mind one of the issues, and it thereby became permissible for defendants to prove that these elements were never actually suffered or that his suffering was not as severe as plaintiff claimed, and hence plaintiff's character became relevant.

Responsibility and damage

In an action for false imprisonment against a corporation tried on arrest but fails to plead any justification, plaintiff is not entitled to have the evidence limited to the amount of damages where there are reasonable grounds to believe that he has violated the law.^{66.5}

Under the general issue or a general denial, defendant may adduce facts to controvert and disprove the case made by plaintiff,⁶⁷ but he is limited to such evidence as directly controverts the fact of his committing the acts complained of,⁶⁸ such as that he did not cause⁶⁹ or participate in⁷⁰ the imprisonment. The defendant may show under the general denial that he is not liable for the acts of the arresting officers under the rule of respondeat superior, unless such nonliability rests on foreign law, in which event the foreign law should be pleaded.^{70.5}

Evidence of matter in confession and avoidance is ordinarily inadmissible under the general issue or general denial but should be specially pleaded,⁷¹ although offered for the purpose of showing that defendant was not guilty of the trespass.⁷² Some authorities permit defendant to offer evidence of justification under the general issue,⁷³ but others hold that such matter must be specially pleaded,⁷⁴ as, for instance, a claim of legal authority, such as restraint on lawful process⁷⁵ or circumstances authorizing an arrest without a warrant,⁷⁶ such as probable cause.⁷⁷ It has been held that one seeking to offer the defense that an agent committing false imprisonment was acting beyond the scope of his authority should plead such want of authority.⁷⁸

While there is authority holding that where plaintiff has averred lack of justification defendant relying on justification must nevertheless plead it specially,⁷⁹ it has also been held that where an issue is directly tendered by plaintiff, under a general issue defendant may introduce evidence to disprove plaintiff's averments, although it would under a different state of the pleadings amount to matter in justification.⁸⁰ This principle is applicable whether the matter in justification is shown by the plaintiff's own proof^{80.5} or by his pleading.^{80.10} It follows

a count alleging that defendant's agent or servant, while acting within the line and scope of his employment, wrongfully caused plaintiff's arrest, the only proper inquiries were as to defendant's responsibility for plaintiff's arrest, and, if responsible, the amount of damages to be awarded. 80.10 Allegations held not to justify

Even if allegations in complaint that two days after his arrest plaintiff was charged under city ordinance, that he had posted bail, and that he did not appear on the charge and forfeited his bail amounted to an allegation that plaintiff had pleaded guilty to charge, allegations would not constitute a defense or justification as a matter of law, to charge of false arrest.

that evidence of lawful arrest for probable cause is admissible under the general issue where the complaint charged an unlawful arrest and imprisonment,⁸¹ that defendants are entitled to introduce a warrant where the petition alleges that there was no affidavit or warrant under which defendant acted,⁸² and that where the illegality of an arrest is alleged, its legality may be proved.⁸³

Where plaintiff alleges malice and want of probable cause, as in support of a claim for exemplary damages, it has been held that defendant may under the general issue adduce facts to controvert such allegations;⁸⁴ but there is also authority to the contrary.^{84.5}

Evidence of damages. A plaintiff who has not pleaded special damages may not introduce evidence thereof.⁸⁵ Although the pleading may not specifically mention the particular item, the language may be broad enough to permit evidence of special damage.⁸⁶ Matters tending to disprove compensatory damages, whether general or special, may be shown by defendant although not set up in the answer, it being sufficient that the answer puts in issue the existence of the cause of action asserted.^{86.5}

Statutes relating to public officers. By statute it has sometimes been provided that to prevent vexatious suits against justices of the peace, bailiffs, constables, and other officers for acts done by them in fulfillment of and by virtue of the duties of their office, they may plead the general issue and under it give in evidence special matter of defense.⁸⁷

d. Variance

A material variance between the pleading and proof is fatal to recovery, but an immaterial variance is harmless.

In accordance with the general principles discussed in Pleading, §§ 531-546, ordinarily a material variance between the pleading and proof is fatal to recovery⁸⁸ but an immaterial variance is harmless.⁸⁹ An allegation that a false imprisonment was committed by defendants in person may be supported by evidence that the acts were done by their agents,⁹⁰ and an allegation of plaintiff's imprisonment without warrant by defendants may be supported by proof of his arrest by an officer under the direction of defendants.⁹¹

Since every false imprisonment includes at least a technical assault, as shown supra § 10, evidence of an assault in addition to an imprisonment or restraint does not constitute a variance;⁹² but a charge of false imprisonment may not be sustained by proof merely of an assault without a showing of some detention or restraint.⁹³

Where damages for malicious prosecution only are sought and plaintiff fails to prove his case he may not recover although defendant's act may lay the basis for an action alleging false imprisonment or civil liability.⁹⁴ A complaint which alleges a wrongful and unlawful imprisonment in a civil action is not supported by evidence of a lawful arrest which afterward became unlawful by reason of a refusal to receive bail.⁹⁵ A declaration against one is not supported by proof against another, there being no charge of conspiracy or that the persons are joint tort-feasors;⁹⁶ but where the complaint alleges a cause of action against defendants on the theory that they were joint tort-feasors, it is not necessary to allege conspiracy, since it can be proved without such an averment, and, if averred, need not be proved, because the gist of the action is not the conspiracy but the wrong done, which is the false imprisonment.^{96.5}

§ 55. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

Ordinarily plaintiff must prove all essential allegations of his complaint, including his unlawful arrest and imprisonment and defendant's connection therewith; and the burden of proving justification rests on defendant unless the facts indicate legal authority for the detention, in which case plaintiff is required to prove the unlawfulness of the imprisonment.

Plaintiff must establish affirmatively and sufficiently⁹⁷ his case,^{97.5} or every essential allegation of his complaint.⁹⁸ Thus, the burden rests on plaintiff to prove that he was falsely arrested and imprisoned,⁹⁹ or, if the arrest was legal, that the circumstances of his detention or imprisonment were such as to constitute false imprisonment.^{99.5} He has the burden to prove facts and circumstances amounting to an unlawful restraint of liberty.^{99.10} Where plaintiff has alleged that defendant unlawfully caused his arrest and imprisonment on a specific charge, he has the burden to show that the arrest and imprisonment were on the charge specified.^{99.15}

Plaintiff also has the burden to establish that his arrest and imprisonment were by defendant, or on his authorization or instigation.¹ He has the burden of showing facts establishing the liability of defendant for the acts of an agent, such as the existence of express or implied authority² or that the act was

Time of detention

In action for false imprisonment of customer of store, who, when she was leaving store, was told by manager that bag containing articles bought elsewhere would have to be searched, plaintiff customer would have burden of proving that time consumed in investigating her conduct was unreasonable if time became material.

99.5 Denial of bail and delay in arraignment

Where arrest was legal, plaintiff has burden to establish that arresting officer had authority to take bail, that bail was offered and refused, and that officer failed to carry plaintiff immediately before nearest magistrate for examination.

Authorization of instigation sufficient

In action for false arrest or imprisonment, it is not essential that plaintiff prove that defendant actually ordered or directed his arrest and imprisonment, but he may make his case by showing that defendant merely instigated it.

Mo.—Jarrett v. St. Francois County Finance Co., App., 185 S.W.2d 855.

Causing arrest

Plaintiff, alleging defendant's agent caused him to be arrested and imprisoned on larceny charge, must prove such agent made such charge. Ala.—U. S. Cast Iron Pipe & Foundry Co. v. Henderson, 116 So. 915, 22 Ala.App. 448, certiorari denied 116 So. 917, 217 Ala. 520, and followed in U. S. Cast Iron Pipe & Foundry Co. v. Williams, 117 So. 927, 22 Ala.App. 695.

Pa.—Bunting v. Goldstein, 129 A. 99, 283 Pa. 356.

25 C.J. p 538 note 14.

Position of assistant store manager is of sufficient importance to raise inference that he had authority to protect his employer's property against theft and acted within line of his duty and scope of his employ-within the scope of the agent's authority.³ Where the arrest is made after the supposed crime has been committed, and not for the protection of the property or interests of the employer, the employee is presumed to have acted on his own account for the vindication of justice.^{3.5}

It has been stated that there is a presumption in favor of the legality of an arrest,^{3.10} that in a case of false imprisonment plaintiff must show, in addition to the arrest, that it was unlawful,^{3.15} and that where plaintiff was arrested by a policeman without a warrant the burden of proof on the issue of probable cause for arrest is on the plaintiff.^{3.20} As a general rule, however, any restraint by fear or force prima facie is unlawful and constitutes false imprisonment, as discussed infra § 57 a, and arrest without a warrant establishes a prima facie case of false imprisonment.^{3.25} It is only necessary for plaintiff to show that he has been imprisoned and restrained of his liberty,^{3.30} and the imprisonment having been established, the law presumes that it was unlawful,⁴ where nothing more appears,^{4.5} or where there is no evidence by defendant in justification of the arrest.^{4.10} An allegation that plaintiff was arrested or imprisoned without process raises a presumption of unlawful arrest and shifts to defendant the burden to justify it by proving that it was lawful.^{4.15}

Where a prima facie case of unlawful arrest or false imprisonment has been established, the burden then rests on defendant of proving justification,⁵ ment in causing arrest of one suspected of stealing such property. U.S.—Montgomery Ward & Co. v. Medline, C.C.A.N.C., 104 F.2d 485.

Presumption of action in official capacity

(1) It being presumed that member of railroad company's police force, in arresting plaintiff for embezzlement and forgery not connected with railroad, was not acting on behalf of railroad, but as public police officer, burden was on plaintiff to prove that company either expressly authorized or subsequently ratified such act.

Pa.—Bunting v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 130 A. 306, 284 Pa. 117.

(2) The rule that, where agent may act in either of two capacities, as policeman for state or as servant for master, it will be presumed that he acted in former capacity, was inapplicable to agents not shown to have been public officers.

Ala.—Southern Ry. Co. v. Beaty, 103 So. 658, 212 Ala. 608.

(3) The rule was also held inapplicable where the agent was one having general duties with reference to the conduct of the business of defendant and had not acted as a police officer for some time in the past.

Actual commission of offense

Where police officer, who stopped motorist to make investigation as to whether motorist was guilty of being an arrest made by him without a warrant, he must show not only that a crime has in fact been committed, but that the person arrested is guilty.^{5,25} It will be presumed where a resident was arrested without a warrant on the misdemeanor charge of operating a business without a license that it would have been sufficient to follow the general practice and issue a summons to require him to appear in court.^{5,30} Defendant has the burden of proving an affirmative defense that he acted on the advice of counsel.^{5,35}

It has been held, however, that a different rule prevails in the case of a defendant on whose complaint plaintiff was illegally arrested, and who took no other part in the proceedings;⁶ and such a person is presumed to have acted with that good faith and probable cause essential to his justification.⁷

If to the bare fact of imprisonment there are added other facts indicating legal authority, the burden rests on plaintiff to prove the imprisonment nevertheless unlawful.⁸ It is immaterial whether plaintiff or defendant introduces such facts.⁹ In either event the burden will rest on plaintiff to rebut the presumption of legality arising from an apparently valid warrant¹⁰ or apparent compliance with common-law or statutory conditions authorizing arrest without warrant.¹¹ Where it appears that the arrest was lawful and there is evidence that plaintiff's detention after arrest and delay in taking him before a magistrate for arraignment were necessary or unavoidable, the burden shifts to plaintiff to refute such evidence.^{11.5} By a complaint alleging unlawful arrest and imprisonment, plaintiff anticipates the defense of justification and unnecessarily assumes the negative burden of proof.¹²

Presumption disregarded

Where plaintiff's evidence tended to prove the lawfulness of the arrest, the question of the lawfulness of the arrest should have been determined as though no presumption that an arrest without warrant was unlawful had existed, and the proof of arrest without warrant should have assumed merely the character of evidence submitted to the jury with other evidence.

Mo.—Engelbrecht v. Roworth, 157 S.W.2d 242, 236 Mo.App. 459.

Detention for grand jury

Where plaintiff, after showing a false imprisonment, introduced evidence of being bound over to grand jury, such evidence overcame presumption that detention was unlawful, since being bound over to grand jury showed probable cause for arrest.

Or.—Brown v. Meier & Frank Co., 86 P.2d 79, 160 Or. 608.

11.5 Okl.—Ames v. Strain, 301 P.2d 641.

Plaintiff cannot recover where he fails to refute evidence that his detention and delay in taking him before a magistrate were necessary or unavoidable.

12. Ala.—King v. Robertson, 150 So. 154, 227 Ala. 378.

sence of evidence to the contrary, the presumption of law will be that plaintiff's character is good.¹³ It is not essential to plaintiff's right of recovery for false arrest on a disorderly conduct charge to prove allegations of the complaint as to his reputation.^{13.5}

Malice. It is not necessary for a plaintiff to prove malice in order to make a case of false imprisonment.^{13.10} In order to recover punitive damages for false arrest on the request of defendant's employee, however, it must be shown by plaintiff that the employee not only acted wrongfully but without just cause or excuse, and with the evil motive to injure and oppress, or at least with a reckless disregard of the rights of the person injured.^{13.15} Malice is generally inferred from want of probable cause, but it is not necessary to prove hatred or ill will or lack of probable cause in order to show malice.^{13.20} Where plaintiff was arrested without a warrant because of an offense committed in the presence of the arresting officers, it will not be presumed that they were impelled to make the arrest by motives wholly personal or to gratify their own feelings of resentment at plaintiff's improper and threatening language.^{13.25}

Damages. The burden is on plaintiff to establish the necessary elements of damage, to wit, mental anguish, anxiety, and shame, resulting expense and trouble, and injury to reputation.¹⁴

Manner of prisoner's release need not be shown.^{14.5}

§ 56. Admissibility of Evidence

- a. In general
- b. Warrant or other process; return
- c. Record of proceedings on which charge is based
- d. Guilt or innocence of plaintiff; conviction or acquittal
- e. Character and reputation
- f. Malice, motive, or good faith
- g. Probable cause
- h. Damages

a. In General

Competent evidence which is material and relevant to the issues presented by the pleadings, such as with respect to the circumstances of the arrest or detention, its unlawfulness, and defendant's responsibility therefor, is admissible.

Under the rules applicable to civil actions generally, evidence to be admissible in an action for false imprisonment must be material and relevant to the issues presented by the pleadings,¹⁵ must

Action against different defendant

In action against bank and officials comply with other general rules such as those as to best and secondary evidence,¹⁶ as to contradicting official records,¹⁷ as to matters of opinion,¹⁸ or as to hearsay.¹⁹

Within these limitations evidence of all of the events occurring from the time of plaintiff's arrest until his discharge is admissible,²⁰ if the connection of defendant therewith appears.²¹ It may be proper to introduce evidence as to the conduct of the parties immediately prior to the arrest,²² of prior unlawful occurrences bearing on the state of mind of defendant at the time of the arrest,^{22.5} as to the facts and circumstances of the arrest or detention,²³ that it was against the will of plain-thereof for false imprisonment of bank teller on false charge of taking money erroneously claimed to have been deposited in bank by customer thereof, complaint in plaintiff's separate action against such customer for slander and compromise thereof were properly excluded from evidence as not alleviating defendants' wrongful acts or mitigating punitive damages.

the disposition of the criminal charge against him;^{28.5} and it may be proper to introduce evidence as to the duration of the detention,²⁹ and the manner of its termination.³⁰ The reason of the court for the release of the plaintiff is generally immaterial.^{30.5}

b. Warrant or Other Process; Return

A warrant, commitment, or other process pleaded in justification of the arrest or imprisonment is admissible in evidence.

Where defendant justifies under a commitment, the commitment is admissible as proof thereof;³² and defendant who has pleaded justification under an executive warrant is entitled to introduce in evidence a properly certified copy of such warrant.³³ Plaintiff is entitled to introduce the execution on which he was taken into custody, although it appears to have been issued by defendants as executors.³⁴

The return of an officer on a warrant issued by a grand juror is prima facie evidence of an arrest under such warrant, as against the grand juror, as well as against the officer.³⁵ The officer's return is admissible in his favor to show that he had the warrant in his hands at the time of arrest,³⁶ but the return is not conclusive.³⁷

c. Record of Proceedings on Which Charge Is Based

The record of the proceedings on which the charge of false imprisonment is based is admissible in evidence.

The record of the original proceedings on which the charge of false imprisonment is based is admissible in evidence in behalf of plaintiff³⁸ or of defendant.³⁹ If the circumstances are such that the record of a subsequent prosecution of plaintiff is admissible, the entire record should be produced and not merely the indictment.⁴⁰ It is permissible to introduce the complaint made against plaintiff after his arrest without warrant for the purpose of showing the cause of the arrest⁴¹ and for its bearing on the credibility of the evidence of defendants.⁴²

d. Guilt or Innocence of Plaintiff; Conviction or Acquittal

Generally evidence as to the guilt or innocence of the plaintiff of the charge on which he was detained, or as to the disposition of the charge, may be relevant and material where it bears on the legality of the arrest, but not otherwise.

Evidence as to the guilt or innocence of plaintiff of the charge on which he was detained may under certain circumstances be relevant and material,⁴³

Purpose of visit

Evidence that plaintiff visited scene of arrest and carefully searched ground five days afterward was admissible to refute his testimony that he made visit for purpose of driving stakes to mark his course on evening of arrest.

Person intended by name used

Where defendants alleged that plaintiff was the person whom grand jury intended to indict and was the one for whom warrant was issued, what person was intended by the name used in the warrant could be shown by all competent facts surrounding the transaction out of which indictment arose and warrant issued.

as where it bears on the lawfulness of the arrest.⁴⁴ Where not bearing on the legality of the arrest, however, evidence as to the acquittal of plaintiffs on their trial of the offense for which they were arrested is not material.⁴⁵ Where the arrest is under process which is not void on its face, evidence as to the proceedings had before the grand jury on the charge preferred by defendant against plaintiff is not material;⁴⁶ and, where plaintiff is arrested on a void warrant, evidence as to the truth of the charge made in the warrant is immaterial.⁴⁷

Evidence is not as a rule admissible as to the conviction of plaintiff on a charge other than that on which the false imprisonment is based,⁴⁸ nor is the disposition of the charge on which the arrest is made material where the action is based on the wrongful conduct of the officer after the arrest,⁴⁹ or his lack of diligence in taking plaintiff before a committing magistrate.⁵⁰ According to some authorities the judgment in a criminal prosecution is admissible in a civil case only to establish the fact of the rendition of the judgment and is not evidence of the guilt of accused justifying an arrest without warrant.⁵¹ In some jurisdictions plaintiff is not entitled to show the result of his trial after an alleged false imprisonment on an arrest without warrant.⁵²

While the plaintiff's character is ordinarily not in issue as respects the right to recover for false imprisonment, evidence thereof may be admissible on the question of damages or where material to a claim of justification arising from reasonable grounds for suspicion of the plaintiff's guilt, or where the nature of the false imprisonment directly involves his character.

The character of the person seeking damages in false imprisonment is not ordinarily in issue so far as mere right to recover is concerned.⁵³ It, however, may be made the subject of controversy and the

Acquittal on subsequent trial

Where a suit for false arrest was based on a prosecution before a police magistrate, which was dismissed, it was not error to refuse the offer of defendant to prove the indictment of plaintiff and his trial and acquittal in the circuit court in a subsequent prosecution initiated by the state's attorney instead of defendant.

Detinue action for goods involved action to recover possession of the guns taken from him, which action had been instituted after theft charges against plaintiff had been dismissed for want of prosecution, was improper.

Matters not raising issue

That plaintiff alleging false arrest was contradicted by number of witnesses as to vital facts, or that defendant's evidence tended to show that plaintiff alleging false arrest had violated law, did not put his character in issue, so as to permit evidence as to his good reputation.

Mo.—Humphreys v. St. Louis-San Francisco Ry. Co., App., 285 S.W. 738.

Sobriety

Testimony in action for wrongful arrest on charge of driving automobile while intoxicated that plaintiff had never been drunk as long as wit-

basis of testimony where the extent of recovery of damages involves its consideration,⁵⁴ as where humiliation, embarrassment, and pain of mind are in issue;^{54.5} and where evidence of plaintiff's bad character is admitted on the issue of the damages he actually suffered from humiliation, embarrassment, and emotional distress, the jury should be carefully admonished as to the limited character of such evidence.^{54.10} Evidence of plaintiff's character is admissible, where an attempted justification of the detention or of arrest without express legal authority is sought to be proved by the existence of reasonable grounds for suspicion of plaintiff's guilt, in view of his character and reputation.⁵⁵

Also, according to some decisions, evidence of plaintiff's good character, either for truth and veracity or honesty and fair dealing, is admissible where the nature of the false imprisonment action directly involves his character and where he was charged with the commission of a crime involving moral turpitude,^{55.5} and evidence of the susceptibility of plaintiff to coercion is admissible under a statute permitting consideration of the disposition of the injured person.^{55.10} It has been held improper to cross-examine plaintiff as to whether he has been in jail before the occasion in question.^{55.15} Evidence as to character may also be admissible where his general reputation for truth and veracity is attacked, as considered in Witnesses §§ 532-535.

Reputation of house. In an action for illegal arrest and imprisonment of plaintiff on a charge of keeping a lewd house, evidence of the reputation of the house for lewdness is admissible on the issue of good faith and probable cause,^{55.20} and evidence of specific acts of lewdness is admissible for the purpose of proving that at the time they occurred the house was run as a lewd house, but not for the purpose of proving reputation;^{55.25} and the fact that such evidence was with respect to the reputation of, and occurrences in, the house several years prior to the arrest has been held not to make it too remote in point of time, where it appears that plaintiff owned the house and resided therein at such times and also at the time of the arrest.^{55.30}

f. Malice, Motive, or Good Faith

Generally evidence as to motive or malice of defendant is immaterial, but such evidence, if its connection with the transaction appears, may be admissible as bearing on the question of damages, particularly punitive or exemplary damages; and it may be material as an element of the illegality of the detention.

As a general rule evidence as to the motive of defendant in causing the illegal imprisonment is immaterial,⁵⁶ except in a case where the motive be-ness knew him and that nobody could make her believe he was drunk, was held inadmissible as irrelevant. Tex.—Jurach v. Cox, Civ.App., 92 S.W.2d 1065.

Miss.—Harris v. Sims, 124 So. 325, 155 Miss. 207.

Evidence of bad reputation

Motive as an element of cause of action see supra § 7.

Different crime than charged

In action against police officers for arresting plaintiff without probable cause and wrongfully detaining him in police station on disorderly conduct charge, admission of testimony that plaintiff was arrested as a sus-

comes material as an element of the illegality of the detention,⁵⁷ or as bearing on the amount of damages,⁵⁸ or in mitigation of damages where punitive damages are sought.^{58.5}

Similarly, malice not being an element of the cause of action, as discussed supra § 7, evidence as to malice is ordinarily inadmissible,⁵⁹ and evidence of good faith is not admissible to defeat a recovery, or on the question of the lawfulness or unlawfulness of the arrest.^{59.5} Evidence with respect to malice or good faith, however, is admissible on the issue of the amount of recovery.^{59.10} Evidence of malice is admissible against the wrongdoer in aggravation of damages,⁶⁰ and evidence of good faith importing a lack of malice is admissible for the purpose of obviating or mitigating exemplary damages;⁶¹ and it has been stated that such evidence is admissible on the question of damages generally, or in mitigation thereof,^{61.5} although other authority has stated that such evidence is not admissible to reduce the actual damages sustained.^{61.10}

To establish the absence of malice facts supporting defendant's belief in the charge may be admitted⁶² or it may be shown that he acted on legal advice;⁶³ but defendant cannot testify to the conclusion that he acted without malice.⁶⁴ The facts and circumstances accompanying the arrest are admissible for the purpose of showing malice where malice is properly in issue,⁶⁵ as are also facts showing the relationship, conduct, and attitude of the invalid, was admissible to refute the charge of malice and wantonness; and this was true as to another search warrant, under which one of the defendants acted, although its period of validity had expired; where witness testified that he communicated to defendants information that plaintiff was transporting liquor, court properly refused to require witness to disclose the source of his information. defendant toward plaintiff during the time he is being prosecuted,^{65.5} and thereafter.^{65.10}

In order that evidence may be admissible as bearing on malice, its connection with the transaction involved must appear.⁶⁶ Prior unsolved thefts have been held admissible to show that defendant acted in good faith.^{66.5} The fact that the arrest was made by defendant at the direction of a superior police officer is admissible in mitigation of damages and to show no malice.^{66.10} An officer's mistake in arresting the wrong person may be shown to reduce damages and show want of malice.^{66.15} As bearing on the question of malice or ill will it is inadmissible to show previous statements of defendant, a village trustee, amounting simply to a direction by him to a police officer to enforce a village ordinance.⁶⁷

The motive of plaintiff in committing the wrongful act for which he was unlawfully arrested is immaterial,⁶⁸ although evidence tending to show motive has been held relevant and admissible as a circumstance bearing on the identity of plaintiff as the perpetrator of the offense.^{68.5} Where the intent of plaintiff is an element of the crime for which he was arrested, evidence of such intent is admissible on the issue of whether or not a crime was committed.^{68.10}

g. Probable Cause

While evidence as to probable cause is not as a rule material, it may be admissible as bearing on the right to exemplary damages or as establishing justification for a detention, and evidence of the truth or falsity of the charge is relevant to the issue of probable cause.

Evidence as to probable cause is not as a rule material in an action for false imprisonment,⁶⁹ and may not be shown to defeat the action.^{69.5} It may be admissible, however, as bearing on the right to exemplary damages,⁷⁰ or in mitigation of damages,^{70.5} and proof of the reasonableness of defendant's conduct is relevant on the issue of punitive damages.^{70.10} Such evidence is also admissible as bearing on the question of whether or not a detention or arrest was justified.⁷¹ Evidence of previous conduct of plaintiff which was unknown to defend-

Proof by defendant of probable cause is material beyond its use in mitigation of punitive damages.

U.S.—Carr v. National Discount Corp., C.A.Mich., 172 F.2d 899, certiorari denied 70 S.Ct. 59, 388 U.S. 817, 94 L.Ed. 495.

Report of private investigator

Report of detective agency investigator investigating burglary for insurance company, which report was examined by police officers before plaintiff was arrested, was admissible as part of res gestae and as material in determining whether officers had reasonable grounds for making arrest.

Ill.—Shelton v. Barry, 66 N.E.2d 697, 328 Ill.App. 497.

ant at the time of the arrest is inadmissible to establish justification.^{71.5} Plaintiff may present evidence in opposition to evidence of probable cause introduced by defendant.^{71.10} Where the action is based on the alleged fraudulent procuring of the commitment of a person as insane, evidence as to the statements made by defendant to the examining physicians is admissible.⁷²

The truth or falsity of the charge is germane to the establishment of probable cause for the detention.^{72.5} Thus, a conviction of plaintiff may be admissible to show probable cause for his arrest;⁷³ and his acquittal may be shown to establish the absence of probable cause;⁷⁴ but plaintiff cannot show what the judge charged the jury on a criminal trial to show want of probable cause.⁷⁵

Commission of similar offenses. Where an arrest is made without warrant, evidence that plaintiff had been guilty of other offenses similar to that charged may be admitted for the purpose of showing probable cause.⁷⁶

h. Damages

As a general rule, plaintiff may introduce evidence of the extent of recoverable damages sustained by him, and defendant may present evidence in mitigation of damages even though such evidence is not admissible in justification.

Plaintiff is entitled to introduce evidence of the extent and amount of damages sustained by him if within the scope of his pleadings, subject to other restrictions generally applicable to the proof of damages.⁷⁷ Thus, he may show the condition of the jail in which he was imprisoned,^{77.5} and evidence relative to his being handcuffed by police officers at the time of his arrest is admissible to prove general damages, even though defendant was not pres-

U.S.—Andrews v. Hotel Sherman, C. C.A.111, 138 F.2d 524.

(2) Evidence that a guest left a hotel without paying his bill leaving baggage in his room and that a few days later a woman paid the bill and reclaimed the baggage was insufficient to show an intent to defraud an innkeeper.

(2) To permit finding of conspiracy to effect plaintiff's arrest.

La.—Levert v. Katz & Besthoff, 115 So. 281, 164 La. 1094.

Mere arrest has been held not to establish a prima facie case of false imprisonment,^{88.5} and on the other hand it has been stated that prima facie, any restraint on the actions of another accomplished by fear or force is unlawful and constitutes false arrest.^{88.10}

b. Acquittal or Conviction; Examination Before Magistrate; Indictment

A dismissal of the charge or an acquittal is prima facie evidence of want of probable cause for the arrest of plaintiff, and a conviction is prima facie evidence of probable cause for the arrest.

Dismissal of the criminal charge on which plaintiff was arrested is prima facie evidence of want of probable cause for arrest,⁸⁹ but an acquittal is not conclusive of the fact that plaintiff was illegally arrested,⁹⁰ and it has been held to have no bearing on the legality of the arrest.^{90.5} On the other hand, a discharge on habeas corpus on the ground of the illegality of the arrest has been held conclusive;⁹¹ but the fact that a contempt order under which plaintiff was imprisoned was held void in a habeas corpus proceeding does not establish as a matter of law that his arrest and detention were unlawful, thereby making the arresting officer liable for false imprisonment,^{91.5} and a discharge because of the unreasonable length of time for which plaintiff was detained is not conclusive as to the legality of his original arrest.⁹²

A conviction is prima facie evidence of probable cause,^{92.5} and it has been held conclusive as to the existence of reasonable grounds for an arrest.⁹³ A plea or verdict of guilty has been held not conclusive that there was justification for the arrest, where the arrest was without a warrant.^{93.5} The fact that plaintiff was held, or bound over for trial, by a magistrate after an examination of the facts or preliminary hearing is prima facie evidence that his arrest was with probable cause⁹⁴ and without malice,^{94.5} but not where there was no hearing or testimony before the magistrate.^{94.10}

(3) To establish that plaintiff committed misdemeanor for which he was arrested.

N.Y.—Rodney v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 267 N.Y.S. 86, 149 Misc. 271.

(4) To show that conviction of plaintiff was obtained by false testimony, corrupt practice, or unjustifiable means, and to rebut prima facie presumption of probable cause, although conviction was subsequently set aside.

Ill.—Galarza v. Sprague, 1 N.E.2d 275, 284 Ill.App. 254.

(5) To establish that plaintiff, who was arrested for fishing without a license, was a "lessee," so as not to be required to have a license.

Ky.—Giannini v. Garland, 177 S.W.2d 133, 296 Ky. 361.

ed and deprived of his liberty against his will.

However, it has been held that a judgment of "guilty as charged," rendered in the absence of the person arrested, was not conclusive evidence that the officers had the right to make the arrest.

Miss.—Carlisle v. City of Laurel, 124 So. 786, 156 Miss. 410.

Ky.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Creech, 291 S.W. 15, 218 Ky. 147.

Conviction after admissions in court

Where, in action purportedly based on the civil rights acts for false arrest and false imprisonment, record showed that plaintiff was convicted of murder, and that during such criminal proceedings, he freely testified in open court as to the details of the killing, and the part he played in the perpetration of the homicide, and admitted that no "third degree" methods had been employed by police officers, there was no basis on which any judgment against police officers for damages would be justified.

Okl.—Ames v. Strain, 301 P.2d 641.

Record not conclusive

Plaintiff suing for unlawful arrest and false imprisonment was held not bound by record of magistrate as to nature of charge against plaintiff, where his testimony clearly established that he was incarcerated for at least twenty-four hours without information and warrant.

94.5 Okl.—Ames v. Strain, 301 P.2d 641.

94.10 N.Y.—Vallon v. Ramage, 93 N.Y.S.2d 56, 196 Misc. 740.

An indictment is prima facie evidence of probable cause;⁹⁵ but the effect of an indictment as prima facie evidence may be overcome by evidence showing that it was obtained by false or fraudulent testimony or through improper means,⁹⁶ or by evidence that defendant did not believe plaintiff to be guilty.⁹⁷ Where the case against one arrested under a warrant charging the issuance of a check without sufficient funds never reached the indictment stage because of payment of the check, the prosecution will be considered to have terminated favorably to plaintiff.^{97.5}

Waiver of examination. The fact that plaintiff waived preliminary examination after his arrest and was committed for trial is prima facie evidence of probable cause, but it is not conclusive,⁹⁸ but other authority has held that a waiver of examination before a magistrate does not establish prima facie evidence of probable cause.^{98.5}

Testimony of defendant's agent that he did not direct plaintiff's arrest is not conclusive, and it may be rebutted by circumstantial evidence in such a way as to raise an issue of fact for the jury.⁹⁹

arrest was off duty as an officer of defendant and on duty as a policeman does not demand the inference that his agency for defendant had terminated, where his duties in both capacities were not inconsistent and could be performed simultaneously.¹

Seeking police aid. Mere exercise of rights to seek aid of police authorities in suppressing thefts of property does not warrant the inference that defendant or his agent requested or directed the unlawful arrest of the suspected offender.²

c. Malice and Probable Cause

An inference of malice may arise from proof of lack of probable cause.

An inference of malice may arise from proof of lack of probable cause,³ or from proof of willful, wanton, or reckless conduct or the obstinate refusal or negligent failure to make reasonable inquiry as to the guilt or innocence of plaintiff.^{3.4} The inference is one of fact which may be rebutted.⁴ Want of probable cause is evidence of malice but is not malice itself, hence it is for the jury to determine, on the evidence, the existence of malice.⁵ In the footnotes reference is made to cases considering the sufficiency of particular evidence to

Failure to state facts fairly

Where, in action for false arrest and imprisonment and malicious prosecution, the uncontroverted evidence discloses that defendant, prior to charging plaintiff with larceny, neglected and refused to lay all the facts fairly and honestly before the county attorney or some competent attorney, malice is implied.

Okl.—Parsons v. Sims, 229 P. 1090, 104 Okl. 1.

Inference from unlawful arrest

Malice may be inferred from the fact of an unlawful arrest, if made without any probable cause for believing plaintiff guilty of the crime charged.

No inference from acquittal

Malice may be inferred from want of probable cause, but want of probable cause and malice may not be inferred from the mere fact of acquittal.

Ala.—Standard Oil Co. v. Davis, supra.

Malice without hatred or ill will

To prove that defendant in false imprisonment action was motivated by malice, it is not necessary to prove hatred or ill will, but only to show the intentional doing of a wrongful act without just cause.

establish malice,⁶ willfulness,^{6.5} and probable cause for arrest,⁷ or want of probable cause.⁸

Where malice or want of probable cause becomes material in an action for false imprisonment, as on the issue of damages, lack of malice or the existence of probable cause may be shown by proof that defendant fairly and fully stated all material facts within his knowledge to a reputable attorney and acted on his advice.⁹

§ 58. Trial

Where the facts disclose a cause of action as a matter of law, the only question to be determined is the amount of damages. A defendant pleading justification has the right to open and close the argument.

Where the allegations of the complaint are sufficient to constitute the basis for an action for false arrest or imprisonment as well as malicious prosecution, the trial of the action in conformity with evidence offered as to false arrest is permissible.^{9.50} The only question to be determined, where the facts disclose a cause of action for false arrest against defendant as a matter of law is the amount of damages.¹⁰

A defendant pleading justification has the right to open and conclude the argument of the case to the jury.¹¹

Defendant cannot, on a motion for a new trial, complain of the exclusion of evidence as to plaintiff's character where he did not, on the trial, question the court's ruling as to the measure of dam-

- Submissible case
- (1) In order to make a case properly submissible to jury, plaintiff is required to prove that he was unlawfully caused to be arrested by defendant and in so doing, while it is not necessary to present evidence that the arrest was specifically ordered by defendant, plaintiff is required to show that defendant instigated it, assisted in it, or by some manner directed, countenanced, or encouraged it.
- Mo.—Checkeye v. John Bettendorf Market, Inc., App., 257 S.W.2d 202.

Identification of accused

Where doubt existed as to whether plaintiff was man named in warrant and, after plaintiff was arrested, no effort was made by sheriff or police officials either to connect or disassociate plaintiff with person named in warrant, although there was opportunity for inquiry and investigation, whether sheriff and police officials failed to use required caution in performance of their duty in making the arrest was for jury.

Taking case from jury. A dismissal, nonsuit, peremptory instruction, or directed verdict in favor of a defendant is proper where there is an absence of the proof necessary to make out a case against him;²⁴ and a verdict should not be directed for defendant, or a nonsuit granted, or the case otherwise taken from the jury, where the evidence is conflicting and, if determined in plaintiff's favor, would entitle him to recover.²⁵ Where plaintiff makes a prima facie case, however, he is entitled to go to the jury.^{25.5} Thus, where plaintiff presents evidence of arrest without a warrant and defendant presents evidence to show a justification for the arrest, the question of whether, under all the facts and circumstances shown by the evidence, the arrest

Directed verdict as only proper one

In action for false imprisonment, trial court properly directed verdict for defendants where it appeared that such verdict was the only one which could properly be reached and that any other verdict would have to be set aside.

Fla.—White v. Miami Home Milk Producers Ass'n, 197 So. 125, 143 Fla. 518.

Undisputed evidence of reasonable care

Verdict should be directed for defendant only when it appears from undisputed evidence that before procuring the arrest and prosecution of plaintiff, defendant endeavored, by exercise of reasonable diligence, to make such inquiry and investigation of facts touching probable guilt of plaintiff as an ordinarily prudent person would have made under same circumstances.

Consideration of all reasonable theories of evidence

The court has no right to instruct a verdict for defendant unless it appears that on no reasonable theory of the evidence can it be held that he has failed to establish his defense. Ariz.—Christiansen v. Weston, 284 P. 149, 36 Ariz. 200.

Failure to prove actual malice was justified is a question for the jury.^{25.10} The presumption of illegality where there was an arrest without a warrant and a subsequent confinement does not warrant submission of the cause to the jury where the record demonstrates the legality of the arrest.^{25.15} Where the uncontroverted facts establish that the arrest was illegal and occasioned by defendant, the jury are properly directed to find for plaintiff and to assess his damages.²⁶

Election as to form of action. Where the action, as originally instituted, sounded in false arrest and imprisonment and malicious prosecution and plaintiff elected to prosecute it as one for false arrest and imprisonment, the sufficiency of the evidence must be measured by the requirements of the form which the action assumed by the election.^{26.5}

b. Reasonableness of Detention

The reasonableness of the detention of the plaintiff, including the question of what constitutes a reasonable time for taking him before a magistrate, is for the court if the evidence thereon is uncontroverted; but if the facts are in dispute, or are susceptible of different inferences, the question is one for the jury.

The reasonableness of the detention of plaintiff,²⁷ including the question of what constitutes a reasonable time for taking him before a magistrate,^{27.5} is a question for the court, where there is no conflict in the evidence as to the length of time and the circumstances under which plaintiff was held. Where, however, the facts are in dispute,²⁸ or where different inferences may be drawn from the undisputed facts,^{28.5} it is for the jury, under proper instructions by the court, to determine the reasonableness of the detention, including the question of whether there was unnecessary delay in preferring charges against plaintiff,^{28.10} or whether an unreasonable period of time elapsed after the arrest of plaintiff before he was taken before a magistrate.^{28.15}

c. Probable or Reasonable Cause

The question of probable cause for the detention of plaintiff is one of law for the court, where the evidence thereon is uncontroverted. If, however, the evidence conflicts it is a mixed question of law and fact, and the jury determine the existence of the circumstances relied on and the court determines their sufficiency to establish probable cause.

In general, if the evidence is uncontroverted, the question of reasonable or probable cause for the detention of plaintiff is one of law for the court.²⁹ If the evidence conflicts, the question of probable cause is a mixed question of law and fact;³⁰ in that case, the question of the existence of the circumstances relied on as establishing probable cause is one of fact for the jury, under proper instructions from the court,³¹ while the question whether the Ordinarily, probable cause is question for jury.

U.S.—J. C. Penney Co. v. O'Daniell, C.A.Okl., 263 F.2d 849.

As contrasted with rule in malicious prosecution

(1) It has been broadly stated that "the principle that the question of probable cause is a question of law for the court . . . is limited to suits for malicious prosecution, and is not applicable to actions for false imprisonment."

Ala.—Bank of Cottonwood v. Hood, 149 So. 676, 679, 227 Ala. 237.

(2) Other authority has stated that there is no material distinction in principle between issue of reasonable grounds for detention in false imprisonment and issue of probable cause in malicious prosecution, and procedure for submission of issue to jury should be same in both cases.

U.S.—Montgomery Ward & Co. v. Freeman, C.A.Va., 199 F.2d 720.

(3) Jury should have been allowed to decide what, if any, inference could be drawn from fact that part of information obtained by store's employees had not been received by direct observation of defendant's employees.

U.S.—J. C. Penney Co. v. O'Daniell, C.A.Okl., 263 F.2d 849.

U.S.—Carr v. National Discount Corp., C.A.Mich., 172 F.2d 899, cer-

existence of such circumstances would amount to probable cause is a question of law for the court.³² If the adjudication of a false imprisonment case depends on a finding of what is reasonable under the the circumstances and the law does not furnish a decisive criterion as to this, so that the matter must be determined by the conclusions of ordinary men, the case must be submitted to a jury for such determination, regardless of whether the facts are disputed.^{32.5}

The question of whether police officers acted reasonably when attempting to arrest a person without a warrant is a question of fact.^{32.10} Whether there was reasonable cause or grounds for suspecting that plaintiff had committed a crime, or was about to commit one, is for the jury,³³ except where the facts are undisputed.³⁴ The intention of plaintiff, a mortgagor, in fleeing the state with mortgaged property is for the jury.^{34.5}

d. Malice and Good Faith

The existence of malice or good faith is generally for the jury.

As a general rule, the existence of malice is a question of fact for a jury,³⁵ as is the question whether a particular person acted willfully and intentionally,^{35.5} and whether defendant³⁶ or an officer³⁷ acted in good faith.

e. Damages

The amount of damages is a question for the jury or trier of facts, as is the existence of circumstances warranting the imposition of punitive damages.

When the facts are controverted or the evidence conflicting, then the determination of their legal effect by the court is necessarily hypothetical, and the jury are to be told that if they find the facts in a designated way, then such facts do or do not amount to probable cause.

The question of the amount of damages to be recovered is one particularly for the jury³⁸ or trier of facts,^{38.5} as is the existence of particular elements of damages,³⁹ such as injury to reputation.^{39.5} No issue as to a particular element of damages, however, should be submitted to the jury in the absence of proof as to such element,⁴⁰ or where the evidence is such that the jury would be required to speculate and guess with respect thereto;^{40.5} but proof of plaintiff's previous good reputation is not a prerequisite to submission of injury to reputation.^{40.10} The decision of the jury as to the amount of damages is generally conclusive,⁴¹ and will not be disturbed unless the award is so flagrantly large or small as to evince passion, partiality, or corruption.⁴²

Punitive damages. It is for the jury to say whether the circumstances of an arrest and imprisonment show malice, oppression, or wantonness so as to warrant a recovery in punitive damages;⁴³ but in the absence of a showing of such circumstances, no issue as to punitive damages should be submitted to the jury.⁴⁴

§ 60. — Instructions

- a. In general
- b. Instructions as to damages

a. In General

The instructions in an action for false imprisonment must clearly set forth the rules of law applicable to the various issues, must define terms accurately, must be supported by the evidence and be within the pleadings, and must not be misleading.

In accordance with the rules applicable generally to civil causes, instructions to the jury on the trial of an action for false imprisonment must substantially and clearly formulate the rules of law applicable to the issues,⁴⁵ such as the existence and involuntary nature of the detention,^{45.5} the legality of the arrest or detention,^{45.10} reasonable or prob-that has been received⁵⁴ and construed in its entirety.⁵⁵

b. Instructions as to Damages

In an action for false imprisonment, the instructions as to damages, both compensatory and punitive, must be in accordance with the pleadings and the facts proved. They should not permit a double recovery or punishment for the same acts.

The court should instruct the jury fully on the question of damages, according to the facts,⁵⁶ and

Lawfulness of arrest

In false arrest action, where plaintiff's evidence tended to prove that arrest complained of was lawful, it was error for trial court to give jury instructions which assumed that the arrest was unlawful.

Effect of particular instructions

Effect of charge that plaintiff's conviction before justice of the peace was prima facie evidence of probable cause for arrest notwithstanding subsequent reversal on appeal restricted jury to a determination of whether defendant, notwithstanding presumption of probable cause, instituted action maliciously by presentation of false testimony or by withholding from justice of peace facts which would explain suspicious appearance and exonerate plaintiff from criminal charge.

must not leave the jury to infer that they have a right to be governed by their arbitrary discretion in lieu of the facts.⁵⁷ Instructions which correctly state general principles of law may nevertheless be erroneous if they are not applicable to the facts of the case⁵⁸ and to the pleadings;⁵⁹ it is not error to refuse to charge requests that are not applicable to the facts of the case, although the requested instruction as an abstract proposition states a correct rule of law,⁶⁰ and a request only partly correct is properly modified.⁶¹

leading,⁶² but a proper instruction is not rendered erroneous by the mere fact that the reasons given for it are erroneous.⁶³ An instruction should not be so worded as to permit a double assessment of damages for the same thing.⁶⁴ In a case of joinder of causes of action, the judge should submit to the jury two issues, not only as to the respective causes of action, but also as to the respective damages therefor.⁶⁵

Instructions must not authorize a double punishment for the same wrong; if they call for damages sufficiently punitive, it is error further to instruct the jury to add a sum as punitive damages; but it is proper to instruct, under justifying evidence, that if the jury find the compensatory damages as ascertained by them not sufficiently punitive, they may increase the sum until it becomes punitive.⁷³

§ 61. — Verdict and Findings

In accordance with the general rules with respect to the verdict and findings of juries in civil actions, any uncertainty in the findings will be construed so as to support the judgment rather than to defeat it, and a general verdict will, if possible, be harmonized with special findings.

General rules respecting the findings of juries in civil actions have been applied in actions for false imprisonment.⁷⁴ Where the jury find against plaintiff, they may render a single verdict for all defendants.⁷⁵ Where each of several defendants is liable for the same wrong, a verdict may properly be found against any or all of them.⁷⁶ In an action against several defendants for false imprisonment and other causes, a general verdict which fails to show how much of the judgment should be charged against each individual defendant fails to comply with a statutory provision requiring a finding by the jury on each separate cause of action.^{76.5} Where both of two defendants are liable if either is liable, and a verdict is found in favor of one and against the other, the latter has no standing to object on account of the inconsistency.⁷⁷

Any uncertainty in the findings will be construed so as to support the judgment rather than to defeat it, and even if the findings are to some extent inconsistent a judgment may not be set aside unless the conflict is clear and material and the findings incapable of being harmoniously construed.^{77.5} Every

Verdict as joint or separate; consolidation

(1) It has been held that a verdict may be properly found against each defendant and against all of them jointly.

Mass.—Bath v. Metcalf, 14 N.E. 133, 145 Mass. 274, 1 Am.S.R. 455.

(2) It has also been held, however, that a separate verdict must be returned as to each defendant against whom the verdict is rendered.

Ky.—Wilder v. Bailey, 25 S.W.2d 381, 233 Ky. 238.

(3) Where the action is against a justice of the peace and a constable, for issuing a warrant not authorized by law, and arresting defendant thereunder, and separate verdicts are rendered against each defendant, the court will consolidate the verdicts into one for the lowest amount, and require a remittitur by plaintiff or a new trial.

Findings held not irreconcilable

(1) Generally.

Cal.—Coyne v. Nelson, supra.

reasonable presumption is indulged in favor of the general verdict, in an action for false arrest, and such verdict will, if possible, be harmonized with special findings.⁷⁸ Where the verdict is merely a general one and does not disclose what portion of the award is special and what portion general, defendant cannot contend that it includes special damages not recoverable in the action.^{78.5} If the question of exemplary damages is submitted, the jury should be instructed to make special findings as to the compensatory and exemplary damages.^{78.10}

§ 62. Judgment and Review

The review of an action for false imprisonment is governed by the rules applicable to the review of civil actions generally.

The general rules as to the review of civil actions are applicable to the review of actions for false imprisonment.⁷⁹

VI. DAMAGES AND PENALTIES

§ 63. Nominal Damages

The fact of an illegal restraint raises the right to recover at least nominal damages.

The fact of an illegal restraint raises the right to recover at least nominal damages;⁸⁰ but there is no liability for even nominal damages where the restraint is not shown to be improper.⁸¹ To warrant a recovery of more than nominal damages, plaintiff must show that he has sustained actual damages,⁸² although he is not required to allege and prove special damages.⁸³

(2) Jury's finding that plaintiff's injuries were not caused by arresting officer's acts were held not in irreconcilable conflict with findings of jury that such officer used no more force than was reasonably necessary, that plaintiff resisted officer, and that his injuries were caused by his own acts in so resisting.
Tex.—Jurach v. Cox, Civ.App., 92 S. W.2d 1065.

(3) Where deputy sheriff arresting and imprisoning plaintiff was in the employ of a private person, finding of jury in action for false imprisonment that deputy was acting as agent of such person in making the arrest and imprisonment justified the application of the doctrine of "respondeat superior" under the evidence, although jury also found that deputy acted on the advice of assistant district attorney in making the arrest and filing criminal complaint against plaintiff.

Credit for set-off

Kan.—Parmenter v. Morrison, supra.

Special findings held consistent with general verdict

Answer to a special interrogatory referring only to a portion of the evidence as to probable cause is not conclusive as to the entire question, and, although favorable to defendant, is not inconsistent with a general verdict for plaintiff.

§ 64. Compensatory Damages

A successful plaintiff is entitled to compensation for the injuries sustained by him, which are the proximate result of defendant's act and its natural and probable consequence.

The recovery of damages in actions for false imprisonment is governed by the usual rules relating to damages in civil actions.^{83.50} Accordingly, a successful plaintiff is entitled to compensation for the injuries shown to have been sustained by him,⁸⁴ which are the proximate result of defendant's wrongful act⁸⁵ and its natural and probable consequence;⁸⁶ the injured person can recover only such damages as grow out of the illegal imprisonment.⁸⁷ As long as the causal connection between defendant's act and plaintiff's injury continues, defendant remains liable, although others participate;⁸⁸ for example, he may be liable for the neglect of prison officials;⁸⁹ but detention by the proper public authorities after an examination by them is not a proximate result of causing the injured party to be arrested and brought before such authorities, unless the detention is obtained by the instigation or urgency of the person causing the original arrest.⁹⁰

False imprisonment ends, as affecting recovery,

when the release of plaintiff's person occurs under reasonable circumstances.^{90.5} When an unlawful imprisonment is followed by a lawful one, recovery may be had only to the time of the lawful arrest;⁹¹ conversely, where the original restraint or imprisonment is lawful, but subsequently becomes unlawful, recovery can be had only for the period of the unlawful imprisonment, and not for the imprisonment in the first instance.⁹²

Where there have been two distinct and separate arrests of the same person, the wrongs inflicted are not merged, and plaintiff does not lose the right to recover damages for both of the periods during which he was falsely incarcerated.⁹³

§ 65. — Measure and Elements

- a. In general
- b. Restraint
- c. Physical injury or suffering
- d. Mental suffering
- e. Loss of time
- f. Losses in business or employment
- g. Expenses incurred
- h. Injury to reputation

a. In General

The measure of damages is such a sum as will fairly and reasonably compensate the injured person for the injuries caused by defendant's wrongful act, including pecuniary loss.

The measure of damages for false imprisonment is such a sum as will fairly and reasonably compensate the injured person for the injuries caused by defendant's wrongful act,⁹⁵ including any special pecuniary loss which is a direct result of the false imprisonment,⁹⁶ whether or not such injuries could have been anticipated.^{96.5} Defendant's wealth,⁹⁷ or his ability to pay, or the ultimate financial effect of payment on him,^{97.5} has no bearing on the amount of compensatory damages, nor has the poverty of plaintiff,⁹⁸ although there is authority to the effect that it is proper to consider plaintiff's occupation⁹⁹ and his condition in life.¹

General damages follow from proof of an illegal restraint, but only the period for which the actual restraint continues is to be considered.

General damages will follow as a matter of course on proof of an illegal restraint of the personal liberty of the injured party,² but only the period for which the actual restraint continues is to be considered.³ The restraint has been considered to continue while the person released remains liable to be confined under proceedings pending under color of lawful authority.⁴

c. Physical Injury or Suffering

Plaintiff is entitled to recover for bodily injuries or illness, or physical suffering or discomfort, resulting from an unlawful imprisonment.

Plaintiff is entitled to recover for bodily injuries or physical suffering which result from an unlawful imprisonment,⁵ or is entitled to recover for illness caused by unlawful imprisonment,⁶ although the injury to health may be due to mental suffering.⁷ Recovery may be had for physical inconveniences and discomforts,⁸ such as those suffered by reason of the condition of the place of plaintiff's confinement,⁹ or his treatment there.¹⁰ Recovery may be also had for the aggravation of personal injuries, sustained by claimant in a prior accident, from the failure to provide prompt medical attention.^{10.5}

any indignity caused by the wrong of the official having charge of the place of imprisonment.¹⁸

According to a number of authorities, it is not necessary, in order to sustain a recovery for mental suffering, to prove a physical injury;¹⁹ but it has been held that mental suffering alone will not sustain a recovery of damages,²⁰ although it can be the basis of a recovery when connected with a physical injury.²¹

e. Loss of Time

Loss of time occasioned by unlawful imprisonment is an element of damage.

Loss of time occasioned by the unlawful imprisonment is a proper element of damage.²²

f. Losses in Business or Employment

Losses in business or employment proximately resulting from false imprisonment are a proper element of damage.

A person subjected to a false imprisonment may recover, as part of his damages, for all losses sustained in his business or employment as a result of such imprisonment.²³ The injury to business must be the proximate result of the imprisonment,²⁴ and must be more than mere speculative damage.²⁵

g. Expenses Incurred

Any reasonable and necessary expense incurred as a result of an unlawful imprisonment may constitute a proper item of damage.

Any reasonable and necessary expense incurred as a result of an unlawful imprisonment may constitute a proper item of damage,²⁶ such as the reasonable expenses of suit,^{26.5} the expense of procuring a discharge from arrest or imprisonment,²⁷ money paid to secure a release,²⁸ and even the expense incurred in curing bodily injuries,²⁹ or regaining health after illness,³⁰ caused by the false imprisonment; and the compensation of attorneys is commonly regarded as a recoverable expense,³¹ although it has been held that an attorney's fees are not recoverable unless his services were necessary to secure plaintiff's discharge from illegal arrest,³² and that, in the absence of facts which would warrant the granting of exemplary damages, the party injured cannot recover compensation paid to an attorney employed in legal proceedings resulting in a release from the illegal arrest.³³ Legal expenses incurred by a volunteer for the benefit of the injured party, without his express or implied consent, are not a proper element of damage.³⁴

While some authorities regard the period in which expenses, to be recoverable, must have been incurred as not limited to the period of actual restraint if the expenses follow as the natural and proximate result of the wrong,³⁵ it has been held that expenses incurred after the actual restraint ceases³⁶ or becomes legal³⁷ cannot be recovered.

Necessity of actual payment. Where an expense is a lawful element of damages, the incurring of a legal liability has been held sufficient, although actual payment has not been made.³⁸

h. Injury to Reputation

Injury to reputation resulting from an unlawful imprisonment is a proper element of damage.

A person who has suffered a false imprisonment may recover damages for an injury to his reputation resulting therefrom,³⁹ and also for injury to his social position,⁴⁰ although it appears to have been held that damages for injury to reputation are limited to cases in which such injury results in a pecuniary loss.⁴¹ and that in the absence of circumstances authorizing the recovery of exemplary damages, damages to character and reputation cannot be recovered.⁴²

In assessing damages to reputation, it is presumed that plaintiff had a good character and reputation.⁴³

§ 66. — Mitigation and Aggravation

- a. Mitigation
- b. Aggravation

a. Mitigation

Strictly, matter in mitigation, such as the absence of malice and the existence of probable cause, cannot be considered in determining the amount of plaintiff's actual damages; but in a number of cases the consideration of such mitigating circumstances, or of matter showing that plaintiff's injury is not as great as he claims, has been held proper.

Strictly speaking, matter in mitigation, such as the absence of malice and the existence of probable cause, cannot be considered in determining the amount to be awarded plaintiff as actual damages,⁴⁴ although, as appears infra § 67, it is to be considered on the question of exemplary damages. However, even without regard to the distinction between punitive and compensatory damages, the amount of plaintiff's recovery is, according to many authorities, to be determined with regard to mitigating circumstances negating malice and showing reasonable ground for the wrong done,⁴⁵ or showing probable cause,^{45.5} or showing mistake, such as a mistake of identity,⁴⁶ or provocation,⁴⁷ or showing that the person sought to be charged acted in good faith or on proper, although insufficient, legal authority,⁴⁸

or on legal advice,⁴⁹ or that the person seeking recovery was guilty of misconduct,⁵⁰ or, where the ground of action is detention for an unreasonable time, that he was guilty of the offense for which he was legally arrested.⁵¹ Matter is also properly considered which goes to show that plaintiff's injury is not so great as is claimed by him,⁵² such as facts indicating lack of damage to the reputation of the injured party,⁵³ or proof of his general bad character,⁵⁴ or proof that he voluntarily remained in prison when by seeking the proper remedy he might have obtained his release.⁵⁵ A release from actual confinement, as on bail, will operate to lessen the damage.⁵⁶

Such circumstances as those tending to show malice and the absence of probable cause may be considered as increasing the damages to be awarded in an action for false imprisonment.

Matters in aggravation of an illegal restraint may usually be considered in determining the amount of damages to which plaintiff is entitled.⁵⁷ Thus, as increasing the amount of damages to be awarded, the jury may consider circumstances tending to show malice and the absence of probable cause,⁵⁸ the circumstances under which the arrest was made,⁵⁹ proof of conspiracy to procure the imprisonment,⁶⁰ the conduct of the person making, or responsible for, the arrest,⁶¹ allegations in the pleading or the manner of conducting the defense against the action brought by the injured party to recover damages,⁶² the conditions of the place of his imprisonment,⁶³ duress during imprisonment,⁶⁴ or publicity given to the imprisonment by publication of accounts thereof in the public newspapers.⁶⁵ Where a person who is liable for damages for a false imprisonment is entirely blameless of an independent wrong committed by another person in connection with the arrest, evidence of the independent wrong cannot be used to aggravate the damages for which the former person may be liable.⁶⁶

An award of exemplary or punitive damages is generally regarded as permissible where the essential circumstances are present.

While the contrary is true in some jurisdictions,⁶⁷ as a general rule, where the accompanying circumstances are such as to warrant them, exemplary or punitive damages may be properly awarded in an action for false imprisonment.⁶⁸ To authorize such sult or outrage,⁸⁰ willful injury,⁸¹ or a wrongful act without a reasonable excuse,^{81.5} or where an arrest was made for the purpose of testing or obtaining a construction of the law,⁸² or in known violation of law.⁸³

A lunatic cannot be assessed with punitive damages.⁸⁴

Negligence alone will not support an award of exemplary damages,⁸⁵ except perhaps where it amounts to a wrong so reckless and wanton as to be without palliation or excuse.⁸⁶

Probable cause. While a lack of probable cause does not in itself establish malice,⁸⁷ it has been held very important on the issue of exemplary damages,^{87.5} and legal malice sufficient to justify an award of punitive damages may in a proper case be inferred from the fact that the arrest or detention was without probable cause.⁸⁸ Malice in law authorizing an award of punitive damages may also exist without regard to whether there is or is not a want of probable cause.⁸⁹

Acts punishable as crime. Under the general rules as to the award of punitive damages in cases of acts punishable as crimes, which are discussed in Damages § 122, there will, in some jurisdictions, be no award of exemplary damages in such cases.⁹⁰

b. Absence of Malice and Aggravating Circumstances

Exemplary damages are not allowed where the false imprisonment was brought about innocently, in good faith, and without malice in fact or law.

Exemplary damages are never allowed where the false imprisonment was brought about innocently, in good faith,⁹¹ and without malice in fact or in law,⁹² wantonness,^{92.5} or oppression,^{92.10} by public officers in the belief that they were performing their public duties,⁹³ or private persons acting in honest mistake with a reasonably founded belief in the lawfulness of the act,⁹⁴ whether the public interest be involved,⁹⁵ as in the apprehension of supposed wrong-

doers,⁹⁶ or merely private interests.⁹⁷ Where a party is legally liable for false imprisonment as a consequence of an unauthorized order of a judge, he should not be penalized because such order may have been prompted in some degree by a spirit of tyranny on the part of the judge.⁹⁸ However, the fact that the wrong was done with good motives will not protect the wrongdoer from liability for punitive damages if he knowingly acts illegally.⁹⁹

c. Absence of Actual Damage

Usually there must be some actual damage to sustain an award of punitive damages.

In accordance with the rules governing the award of punitive damages in actions generally, which are discussed in Damages § 118, it is usually required that there be some actual damage to sustain an award of punitive damages.¹ Thus a judgment on a verdict awarding punitive but no actual damages has been held error.² However, an instruction that, if plaintiff sustained no actual damages, he cannot recover punitive damages in any event has been held properly refused;³ and it has been said that in cases of this kind it is not necessary to prove any compensatory damages.⁴ Nominal compensatory damages will support a verdict for punitive damages.⁵

d. Liability of Employer or Principal

In a proper case a master or principal may be liable in exemplary damages for a false imprisonment occasioned by his servant or agent.

Under the rules applicable to the recovery of exemplary damages generally, which are discussed in Damages § 125, a master or principal may be liable in exemplary damages for a false imprisonment occasioned by his servant or agent,⁶ although in some jurisdictions he must be shown to have participated in the wrongful act,⁷ or expressly or impliedly authorized or ratified it,⁸ or, prior to the act, have had knowledge of the unfitness or incompetency of the servant or agent.⁹ If a corporation through its responsible officers participates in or directs the unlawful acts, the corporation will be liable for exemplary damages.¹⁰

e. Determination of Amount

While the amount awarded as exemplary damages is not dependent on the amount of the general or actual damages, it must be reasonable and not an arbitrary award.

As is discussed supra § 59, the amount to be awarded as exemplary damages is ordinarily a question for the jury. While the amount of the award is not limited by, or dependent on, the amount of the general or actual damages,¹¹ it must be reasonable according to the circumstances of the case,¹² and not an arbitrary award.¹³ Plaintiff's social and economic status,^{13.5} as well as defendant's wealth,¹⁴ may be considered in fixing the amount of punitive damages.

Excessive and inadequate damages are considered infra § 68.

f. Mitigation

Matters in mitigation may be properly considered for the purpose of reducing the amount of punitive damages.

In those cases in which punitive damages may be awarded, it is proper to admit evidence of mitigating circumstances warranting a reduction of such damages,¹⁵ as, for example, defendant's good faith¹⁶ or the absence of actual malice.¹⁷ Other matters, such as personal courtesy shown the injured party,¹⁸ that the action complained of was taken on advice of counsel,¹⁹ probable cause,²⁰ proof of plaintiff's own misconduct,²¹ or provocation,²² may also be shown.

Effect of secondary liability. Proof that a person other than the person doing the wrong will be compelled to pay the damages assessed is not proper as a matter in mitigation of damages.²³

§ 68. Excessive and Inadequate Damages

Unless an abuse of discretion is shown, the verdict of the jury will not usually be disturbed on the ground of its inadequacy or excessiveness.

The law does not prescribe a definite rule for the ascertainment of the exact amount of damages recoverable for false imprisonment,²⁴ such question being primarily one for the determination of the jury, or for the trial court sitting without a jury, as is discussed supra § 59. In fixing the amount of damages a jury are justified in exercising a liberal discretion, taking into consideration all the items for which damages may properly be awarded.²⁵ Although many items of damage sustained by reason of a false imprisonment are not capable of being measured accurately in money value, they are still proper items of compensation, and the jury, after considering the facts of each case, may properly award such amount of damages as in their fair judgment they consider will properly compensate the injured person.²⁶

As a general rule the verdict of a jury will not be interfered with because of its inadequacy except

VII. CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY

§ 71. Offenses and Responsibility Therefor

- a. Definition and nature of offense
- b. Defenses
- c. Persons liable

a. Definition and Nature of Offense

False imprisonment, as a criminal offense, is the actual and unlawful restraint or detention of one person against his will by another, by actual or reasonably apprehended force.

False imprisonment was indictable as a specific crime at common law,⁴⁴ and this doctrine still applies in states where the common law has been adopted.⁴⁵ It is also made a crime by statute in many states.⁴⁶ The gist of the offense is the actual and unlawful restraint or detention of one person against his will by another,⁴⁷ without authority of law,^{47.5} by actual force or reasonably apprehended force,⁴⁸ although actual force is not necessary.⁴⁹ False imprisonment constitutes an aggravated assault.^{49.5}

The word "detention," as used in statute defining "false imprison-

The detention must be willful and against the consent of the person detained, and by some conduct which prevents him from moving from one place to another.⁵⁰ The mere fact that a person considers himself under arrest is not sufficient,⁵¹ although it has been held that one who wrongfully orders another to leave a certain place, and who is obeyed but not through fear of violence, is guilty of false imprisonment.⁵² One who induces another, by fraud, but without any restraint, to go to a certain place does not commit the offense.⁵³ An arrest may be legal in its inception but subsequently become illegal by a detention for an unreasonable length of time.⁵⁴

Grade of offense. Under some statutes the offense is either a misdemeanor or a felony as dependent on the nonuse or use of violence.⁵⁵

Coercion. In some states the statutory offense of "coercion" is analogous to that of false imprisonment.⁵⁶

Under the Philippine Penal Code false imprisonment, as a crime, could be "detención ilegal," which was the unlawful locking up or detaining of another, or in any manner wrongfully depriving him of his liberty, by a private individual,⁵⁷ or could be "detención arbitraria" which was the same as "detención ilegal" except that the former was committed by a public officer as distinguished from a private individual,⁵⁸ or could be "coacción" which was the unlawful and forcible coercion of another's will with or without detention.⁵⁹ A judicial officer ment," which definition is embraced in statute defining "kidnapping," does not mean mere "seizure," but "detention" is a keeping back, confinement, or restraint, or a keeping in possession for some period of time, whereas "seizure" means to take possession of forcibly, to grasp, to snatch, or to put in possession. Statute defining offense of willfully and wrongfully placing or attempting to place another in a hospital for the insane by any method other than as prescribed in certain other statutes is not a "malum prohibitum law," and the words "willfully and wrongfully" imply an intent to injure or harass or in some manner wrong the person so placed in asylum.

who caused a detention without justification could be criminally liable.⁶⁰

b. Defenses

It is a valid defense to a charge of false imprisonment that the arrest was justified or the imprisonment was lawful. The motive and good faith of defendant are also matters of defense to be considered.

The defenses applicable to the criminal offense are mutatis mutandis governed by substantially the same principles as the tort, considered supra §§ 5-35. That the arrest was justified or the imprisonment lawful constitutes a valid defense;⁶¹ but it is no defense that the other person was also engaged in an unlawful act.⁶² Consent to the act constitutes a defense.^{62.5} Authority to arrest and turn in deserters and stragglers affords no justification where a man arrested as a straggler, instead of being immediately turned over to the proper authorities, is forcibly and unlawfully detained and prevented from returning.⁶³

Under Philippine Penal Code. Where the facts and circumstances furnished reasonable grounds to suspect the guilt of the person arrested, a judicial or peace officer was not liable for an arrest⁶⁴ or detention.⁶⁵ The fact that the arrested person answered the description of a criminal wanted justified an arrest.⁶⁶ However, municipal police officers who made an arrest in violation of their duty were liable,⁶⁷ as was a private person who made an arrest without a warrant for any misdemeanor which would not have justified a peace officer in so doing;⁶⁸ but one who requested a peace officer to make an arrest was not criminally liable therefor where the officer acted on his own initiative and judgment.⁶⁹

Motive or malice; good faith. Although the guilt of defendant is generally determined irrespective of the motive with which the imprisonment was committed,⁷⁰ the motive and good faith of defendant may be important parts of his defense, and as such are legitimate matters to be considered by the jury.⁷¹ On the other hand, the absence of good faith or probable cause in causing the wrongful detention furnishes the willful intent required for a conviction, under some statutes.⁷² Where there was an imprisonment by a private person consequent on an arrest without a warrant under circumstances not justifying such a course, the bona fide belief of defendant that a crime had been committed and that the prosecutor was the guilty person might go in mitigation of the punishment.⁷³

c. Persons Liable

Any person who causes or participates in an unlawful arrest or detention is guilty of false imprisonment.

Any person who causes an unlawful detention or arrest⁷⁴ and all persons participating in an unlawful arrest or detention⁷⁵ are liable. It is not nec-

Transportation

The fact that deputy constable did not participate in the arrest of those who were arrested and imprisoned would not relieve him from guilt under statute punishing the unlaw-essary that defendant be present at the time of the arrest, provided it was done under his procurement.⁷⁶ However, the mere observation of what is going on and the fact that defendant did nothing to prevent the commission of the offense is not sufficient to impose liability.⁷⁷ A person rendering aid to an officer in the safekeeping of a prisoner does so at his peril; he is bound to know whether or not the officer acts under legal and valid process.⁷⁸ A parent may be liable criminally for false imprisonment of a child.⁷⁹ An arrest by a police officer without a warrant for the violation of an invalid municipal ordinance renders him criminally liable.⁸⁰ One invested with limited judicial discretion, who in causing an arrest acts clearly without his jurisdiction, is liable.⁸¹

Under the Philippine penal code, in order to support a prosecution for "detención ilegal," it was necessary that defendant committed the wrong in person.⁸²

§ 72. Prosecution and Punishment

The rules obtaining in criminal prosecutions generally apply in a prosecution for false imprisonment with respect to the indictment or information, the evidence, the trial, and the punishment.

An indictment at common law for false imprisonment must negative the legality of the detention⁸³ by alleging facts and circumstances which show an unlawful arrest.^{83.5} Under some statutes it is defective if it fails to allege that the detention was without lawful authority,⁸⁴ although it concludes "contrary to the form of the statute, etc."⁸⁵ The indictment or information should follow the statute in every essential particular, such as alleging wrongful intent,⁸⁶ although an information charging the offense under the common law may be sufficient under the statute.⁸⁷ The indictment must show in what county the offense charged was committed.⁸⁸

Under some statutes it should allege the mode in which the detention was effected,⁸⁹ as by assault, actual violence, threats, or the like, in the language of the statute,⁹⁰ but the detention need not be further particularized.⁹¹ The prosecution is confined to the kind of detention alleged, and proof of a detention by assault will not support an allegation of detention by threats.⁹² A justice of the peace indicted for false imprisonment under color of legal process is not entitled to the right of appearance and of being heard before the grand jury when the indictment is found.⁹³

Burden of proof and presumptions. The burden is on the prosecution to prove the material allegations of the indictment or information,⁹⁴ such as ful arresting, imprisoning, or transporting of another, or the aiding and abetting in such acts, where deputy constable did not dispute that he actively participated in the imprisonment of the arrested victims by transporting them by automobile from the point where they were arrested to the county jail.

Intent

In prosecution for unlawfully imprisoning another with intent to cause the other to be secretly confined and imprisoned against his will, state had burden of proving that accused had intent to cause the other

willful and wrongful detention^{94.5} and lack of consent.^{94.10} Generally it is required to prove only the detention⁹⁵ in the county, as averred in the indictment or information,⁹⁶ since the detention is presumed to be unlawful,⁹⁷ and such presumption exists notwithstanding it is not specifically enumerated among those found in a statute defining disputable presumptions.⁹⁸

After proof of the confinement or detention, the burden of establishing its lawfulness⁹⁹ or its justification¹ is on defendant, unless the evidence introduced by the prosecution tends to show such facts.² If the arrest was made with process defendant must show that it was properly issued and legal on its face³ and if it is made without process he must show the grounds justifying it.⁴ A person causing an illegal restraint of another is presumed, but not conclusively, to have intended the ordinary and natural consequences of his own act.⁵

Admissibility of evidence. Under the rules applicable to criminal prosecution generally the evidence must be pertinent to the issues.⁶ Evidence of defendant's good faith and the absence of malice is admissible to mitigate the punishment,⁷ although inadmissible on the issue of justification.⁸ The illegal act of the prosecuting witness has been held inadmissible to mitigate the penalty.⁹ Evidence of statements and acts of the person assisting in making the arrest, showing that he and defendant acted together throughout the entire proceeding, is admissible.¹⁰

In the Philippines evidence of civil damages was admissible in a criminal action based on the same state of facts.¹¹

The weight and sufficiency of the evidence is governed by the rules relating to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence in criminal prosecutions generally.¹² A conviction for false imprisonment to be secretly confined against his will.

Degree of proof

In prosecution arising out of defendant's making a citizen's arrest of person charging such person with perjury, instruction that unless jury found that person had actually committed perjury the arrest was not lawful was erroneous as placing an undue burden on defendant and depriving him of benefit of reasonable doubt as to lawfulness of the arrest, since instruction was required to be treated as though it expressly declared that burden was upon defendant to prove lawfulness of arrest by preponderance of the evidence.

will be set aside and a new trial granted for insufficiency of evidence as in other criminal cases.¹³

Trial. The instructions in the charge to the jury must substantially and clearly formulate the rules of law applicable to the offense,¹⁴ such as those dealing with willful and wrongful imprisonment,^{14.5} and absence or presence of reasonable grounds for arrest.^{14.10} An incorrect request to charge should be correctly modified or rejected.¹⁵ It is not prejudicial error to charge all the acts mentioned in the statute by which false imprisonment might be committed, instead of limiting the charge to the acts alleged.¹⁶ In rulings on evidence and instructions, the law is more liberal in a criminal prosecution for false imprisonment than in a civil action for the same offense,¹⁷ particularly as to officials charged with the enforcement of the criminal law.¹⁸

The fact of the false imprisonment,¹⁹ of lack of consent,^{19.5} the good faith of the officers charged therewith,²⁰ and probable cause for making the arrest^{20.5} are generally questions for the jury.

Punishment. The punishment to be imposed on a conviction is usually regulated by statute.^{20.10} The punishment inflicted should not be excessive,²¹ but if a fine imposed is considered excessive it may be reduced in the discretion of the reviewing court.²² Where the statute provides that a person guilty of false imprisonment shall be fined, and may be confined, the jury cannot assess a punishment of a jail sentence without assessing a fine.²³

FALSELY. The word "falsely" is an adverb,^{0.1} which may be used merely to mean in opposition to the truth,¹ not true, erroneous, or incorrect;^{1.5} and is defined in this sense merely to mean erroneously; not truly; in a false manner;² inaccurate, erroneous, faulty.³

implying scienter,⁴ it is recognized that the term may mean something more than mistakenly or untruly,^{4.5} and it has been said that it usually imports somewhat more than the vernacular sense of erroneous or untrue, that it is oftenest used to characterize a wrongful or criminal act, such as involves an error or untruth, intentionally or knowingly put

§ 1. Definition

"False personation" may be broadly defined as an offense consisting in pretending, without lawful authority, to be a particular person in order to deceive others.

"False personation" may be defined as the criminal offense of falsely representing some other person and acting in the character thus unlawfully assumed, in order to deceive others and thereby gain some profit or advantage or enjoy some right or privilege belonging to the one so personated or subject him to some expense, charge, or liability.¹ Historically, fake personation was not made an offense merely for the protection of the person impersonated.²

"To falsely impersonate" may mean to pretend to be a particular person without lawful authority.³

False personation is in the nature of positive aggressions or invasions, such as constitute common-law offenses.^{3,5}

§ 2. As Common-Law and Statutory Offense

- a. At common law
- b. Under statutes

a. At Common Law

Apart from the species of cheat or fraud accomplished through the false personation of another, or where there is a conspiracy, the mere fact of personating another is not a common-law offense.

Apart from the species of cheat or fraud at common law accomplished through the false personation of another, considered in False Pretenses § 4, or where there is a conspiracy, considered in Conspiracy § 54, it seems that the mere fact of personating another is not an offense at common law.⁴

b. Under Statutes

The offense of false personation is now generally defined by statutes, which vary in the different jurisdictions as to the circumstances constituting the offense. They should be construed in harmony with their aim.

The statutes of England early began to distinguish between the different species of cheat, and to carve out a distinct offense for obtaining money or property by falsely personating another.⁵ In the United States such an offense has been widely defined by statutes, which declare false personation to be an offense in a variety of circumstances, such as falsely to personate an officer or a class of officers, or a government employee,⁶ or a voter at an election, see Elections § 323, or a lodge member.⁷

Other statutes make it an offense to personate another, and in such assumed character to receive property intended for the party personated with intent to convert it to the recipient's own use,⁸ falsely to personate another, and, in such assumed character, receive any property of any description intended to be delivered to the person so personated,⁹ falsely to personate another, and in such assumed character to do any act whereby any benefit might accrue to the offender or to another person,¹⁰ falsely to personate another and in such assumed character to become bail or surety for any party,¹¹ falsely to personate another and in such assumed character execute any written instrument in the name of another person with the intent that it shall be used as true,¹² falsely to personate another, and in such assumed character, subscribe, verify, publish, acknowledge, or prove, in the name of another person, any written instrument with intent that it may be delivered or used as true,¹³ or falsely to personate another and in such assumed character execute an instrument for registration.¹⁴

Still other statutes make it an offense falsely to personate another, and under an assumed name give authority to some person to sign such assumed name to anything, which, if genuine, would create, increase, diminish, or discharge any pecuniary obligation,¹⁵ falsely to personate another with the effect of making the one personated liable to any suit or prosecution or to pay any sum of money, or to incur any charge or forfeiture, whereby any benefit might accrue to accused or to any other person,¹⁶

§ 3. Elements of Offense and Persons Liable

- a. In general
- b. Consummation of offense
- c. Persons liable

a. In General

To constitute the offense, there must be an untrue or false personation of the officer or person designated in the statute, with, ordinarily, an intent to defraud. The representations need not, unless the statute requires, be such as are reasonably calculated to deceive, and may consist of verbal declarations or the exhibition of a badge or certificate.

To constitute the offense there must be an untrue or false personation under circumstances covered by the statute.²²

"Intent to defraud"

Words "intent to defraud," within statute providing that whoever with intent to defraud shall falsely pretend to be an officer or employee acting under authority of the United States or any department or any officer of the government shall be guilty of a crime, do not require more than that defendants have, by artifice and deceit, sought to cause the deceived person to follow some course which he would not have pursued but for the deceitful conduct. U.S.—U. S. v. Lepowitch, 63 S.Ct. 914, 318 U.S. 702, 87 L.Ed. 1091, rehearing denied 63 S.Ct. 1171, 319 U.S. 783, 87 L.Ed. 1727.

Interpolation of "and" or "or"

Statute providing that any person who shall, without due authority, exercise or attempt to exercise authority of a peace officer of state, county, town or "city who shall claim, pretend, or hold himself out to be such officer" shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, can be reasonably construed only by interpolating either "and" or "or" after the word "city."

Essence of the offense

(1) The essence of the offense of false personation is that the party charged must falsely personate another, and in such assumed character do either of the acts provided under the statute.

Okl.—Raymer v. State, supra.

(2) The essence of the offense is the falsely assuming or pretending to be an officer or employee of the United States and the taking of a thing of value in such pretended character.

U.S.—Shepherd v. U. S., C.A.Kan., 177 F.2d 938.

(3) The statute condemning the false impersonation of a United States officer does not make the wearing of the uniform of the impersonated officer an essential element of the offense charged.

U.S.—Shepherd v. U. S., supra.

Motives immaterial

The fact that defendant's motives in going to a house which had been burglarized and asking permission to see if anything had been stolen may have been sinister and that he may have been a confederate of the burglar will not justify conviction for false personation of an officer. Tex.—Walker v. State, 229 S.W. 853, 89 Tex.Cr. 180.

Representation

Defendant, by going to the apartment of prosecuting witness, showing a badge, stating that he understood that the witness had liquor in his apartment, and starting to search the place, represented that he was an officer acting under the authority of the government to search premises for intoxicating liquors.

name,²⁶ or personates an organization;²⁷ and a statute punishing the false personation of a certain officer or class of officers is not to be applied to the false personation of a different officer or class of officers,²⁸ or where a person represents himself as an officer, but not as a particular officer.²⁹

Ordinarily there cannot be a personation of a supposititious individual who never existed,³⁰ or of an officer where there is no legally appointed officer of the character which accused was assuming to personate;³¹ but under a statute punishing one assuming to be an officer of the government, the offense may be committed even though the offender assumes to hold an office which has no legal existence.³² The offense may be committed even though the person whose name and character are assumed is dead.³³ It has been held that a mere unwarranted exercise of authority by an officer under a misconception of his powers,³⁴ or an obtaining of money with fraudulent intent by an officer acting under an apparent authority,³⁵ does not constitute a false personation.

The representations need not, unless the statute so requires, be such as are reasonably calculated to deceive,³⁶ as reliance is not an element of the statutory offense.^{36.5} Verbal declarations may constitute a false pretending or impersonation equally with the exhibition of a counterfeited badge or a false certificate of authority.³⁷

Intent. The intent to misrepresent,³⁸ and generally,³⁹ but not under all statutes,⁴⁰ the intent to defraud, are essential elements of the offense.

b. Consummation of Offense

The offense must be consummated in accordance with the terms and meaning of the statute.

The offense must be consummated in accordance with the terms and meaning of the statute;⁴¹ so, the false pretense of being a person of the class or character designated in the statute is the gist of the action.⁴² To consummate the crime something beyond the false pretense has been required; there

United States statute

(1) The statute, 18 U.S.C.A. § 912, does not now require an intent to defraud as an element of the offense. U.S.—U. S. v. Meeker, D.C.Alaska, 110 F.Supp. 743.

(2) Formerly, the statute required the intent to defraud as an essential element of the crime.

U.S.—Kane v. U. S., C.C.A.Mo., 120 F.2d 990.

U. S. v. Lepowitch, D.C.Mo., 48 F.Supp. 846, reversed on other grounds 63 S.Ct. 914, 318 U.S. 702, 87 L.Ed. 1091, rehearing denied 63 S.Ct. 1171, 319 U.S. 783, 87 L.Ed. 1727.

(3) However, intent to defraud has been referred to in cases decided since the amendment of the statute in 1948.

U.S.—Dickson v. U. S., C.A.Colo., 182 F.2d 131—U. S. v. Wight, C.A.N.Y., 176 F.2d 376, certiorari denied 70 S.Ct. 478, 338 U.S. 950, 94 L.Ed. 586.

must be some act in keeping with the offense,⁴³ and an overt act in furtherance of the false personation.⁴⁴ Under other authority, the statute may be violated by either an act or a pretense.^{44.5}

It has been held not necessary that the person impersonated or defrauded be actually injured.⁴⁵ In cases where the receipt of money or property by the impersonator is a part of the offense, it seems that the person defrauded must have paid the money because of the false personation.⁴⁶

It has been held that, if one falsely pretends to be a designated officer, and in such character performs an act claiming it to be official, he is guilty of false personation, whether or not such act be one which would be required of such officer, or be legal if done by him in a bona fide official capacity.⁴⁷

c. Persons Liable

A person who is an officer, or has a character, as he claims, cannot be guilty of false personation of such officer or character, but he may be guilty of the crime of aiding and abetting another in the commission of such crime.

A person who is an officer, or has a character, such as he claims is incapable of committing the crime of false personation of such officer or character,⁴⁸ but he can be guilty of the crime of being an aider and abettor of another in the commission of such crime, even though the statute makes an aider or abettor a principal.⁴⁹

§ 4. Prosecution and Punishment

The rules governing the indictment or information, evidence, and trial in the prosecution and punishment of the offense of false personation are discussed in the following sections.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 5. — Indictment or Information

- a. In general
- b. Variance

a. In General

The indictment, information, or complaint must directly and positively allege the facts of the crime charged with such particularity that the accused is notified of the offense with which he is charged, is able to prepare his defense, and will be protected against another prosecution. All the elements of the offense should be alleged, but only one offense should be charged in a count.

Conformably to the rules applicable in criminal proceedings generally, see Indictments and Informations §§ 98-106, an indictment, information, or complaint for false personation must directly and positively allege all the facts necessary to constitute the crime with which defendant is charged, with such particularity that accused is notified with reasonable certainty of the precise offense with which he is charged,⁵⁰ may be advised of what he must an-

Action in assumed character

Such a statute does not attempt to punish any person for falsely assuming to be any of the officers named in the section, but for assuming and taking on himself to act as such.

No valuable thing demanded or obtained

An act in the pretended character of a federal officer or employee will constitute an offense under 18 U.S.C.A. § 912, and under former similar statutes, even though the act is neither the demanding nor the obtaining of a valuable thing.

Indictment held sufficient

(1) Indictment accusing defendant of exercising or attempting to exercise without authority the functions of police officer.

Ga.—Loomis v. State, 51 S.E.2d 13, 78 Ga.App. 153.

(2) Indictment held sufficiently to allege nature of offense where it charged that on a certain date, at a certain place, defendants, knowingly and with intent to defraud a named person, falsely assumed and pretended to be officers and employees of the United States, acting under authority of the United States, namely, immigrant inspectors of the department of labor of the United States, and took on themselves to act as such officers, when in truth they were not agents or employees of the government.

U.S.—Heskett v. U. S., C.C.A.Cal., 58 F.2d 897, certiorari denied 53 S. Ct. 89, 287 U.S. 643, 77 L.Ed. 556.

(3) Indictment charging defendant with falsely impersonating federal employee and obtaining money by reason thereof sufficiently charged violation of federal law.

U.S.—U. S. v. Ford, D.C.Pa., 58 F.2d 1029.

(4) Indictment alleging that accused exercised and attempted to exercise the authority of a peace officer without alleging that he pre-

swer,⁵¹ and be able to prepare his defense,⁵² and so that it will constitute a sufficient foundation for a judgment,⁵³ and that the judgment may be a bar to any other prosecution for the same offense.⁵⁴ However, in testing the sufficiency of an indictment after verdict to determine whether it constitutes a sufficient foundation for a judgment and adequately protects defendant against another prosecution for the same offense, it may be aided by reasonable inferences and clear implications from the allegations made.⁵⁵

At common law, it was necessary that the several elements of the offense should be alleged with due particularity;⁵⁶ and, in indictments on statutes, it has been held that the facts should be given as minutely and particularly as would be required by common-law rules.⁵⁷ The indictment should set forth affirmatively all the elements constituting the statutory offense.⁵⁸ Nevertheless, a general allegation of the impersonation of a government official has been held sufficiently to charge the offense under a statute.^{58.5}

An indictment is insufficient where it is susceptible of two different constructions, under neither of which a complete offense is stated.⁵⁹ It is not necessary to state anything in the indictment which it is not necessary to prove.⁶⁰ An information for false personation of an officer must set out the pretense charged with sufficient particularity to enable accused to know what office he is charged with assuming;⁶¹ and, under statutes which are construed to refer only to the personation of another tended to be such officer was sufficient to charge the offense of impersonating an officer.

Direct statement unnecessary

There is no sound reason why all the facts and elements of the crime should be required to be stated directly.

U.S.—Kane v. U. S., supra.

Indictment held sufficient

An indictment, which specifically alleged that accused falsely and feloniously pretended to be an agent of the department of justice and by false representations sought and obtained a written signed statement from named person contrary to the form of the statute, was sufficient to charge offense of falsely impersonating officer or employee of the United States with intent to defraud, as against attack made after conviction that indictment was fatally defective for failure to charge that accused's acts were done with intent to defraud.

25 C.J. p 579 note 49.

Language of statute

(1) Indictment or information which charges the offense in the language of the statute, or which substantially follows its wording, is sufficient.

U.S.—Garrison v. Hudspeth, C.C.A.Kan., 108 F.2d 733.

Ariz.—Midkiff v. State, 30 P.2d 1057, 43 Ariz. 323.

Tex.—Yoes v. State, 254 S.W.2d 141, 158 Tex.Cr. 201.

(2) It is usually sufficient to follow the statute provided doing so sets forth every element of the offense and the indictment alleges enough to advise accused of what he has to meet to present his defense.

U.S.—Baas v. U. S., C.C.A.La., 25 F.2d 294.

(3) Necessity and sufficiency of employing language of statute in criminal proceedings generally see Indictments and Informations § 139.

Falsity of pretense

An indictment charging that defendants did assume and pretend to be United States revenue officers sufficiently charges that they falsely assumed or pretended to be officers, since the word "pretend," in the connection in which it is used, implies the putting forward of a false appearance of being officers, the simulating or feigning to be officers.

U.S.—King v. U. S., C.C.A.Fla., 279 F. 103.

Intent to defraud

U.S.—Kane v. U. S., C.C.A.Mo., 120 F.2d 990.

(1) Good pleading requires that the act committed which completes the offense be set out with reasonable certainty and not by inference in order to charge the offense.

U.S.—Baas v. U. S., C.C.A.La., 25 F.2d 294.

(2) It is not sufficient to charge that accused falsely pretended to be an officer of the United States with intent to defraud a named person. It is necessary to charge in addition that accused did something in his pretended character, or at least demanded something of value while so pretending. This is a matter of substance and not of form.

U.S.—Baas v. U. S., supra.

Complete offense

Indictment alleging that on certain day in certain city accused willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and falsely impersonated another, and in such assumed character took a civil service examination for the position of policeman in the city, and by reason thereof received a certain sum of money from the one falsely impersonated, sufficiently stated a complete offense under false impersonation statute.

Colo.—People v. Horkans, 123 P.2d 824, 109 Colo. 177.

Indictment or information held insufficient particular individual, it has been held that the indictment is demurrable if it does not state the name of the individual personated;⁶² but it is not necessary to state his whereabouts or residence.⁶³ An indictment has been held not demurrable on the ground that the thing demanded is not a valuable thing within the meaning of the statute, since someone may be defrauded even though he parts with something of no measurable value.^{63.5}

Applying the general rule that two or more distinct and substantive offenses cannot be charged in the same count, see Indictments and Informations § 162, an indictment for false personation is not only not defective where it fails to charge both of two distinct offenses provided for in a statute,⁶⁴ but it is insufficient where it undertakes to charge two separate offenses in a single count.⁶⁵ Since the federal statute on the subject defines two separate offenses, an indictment charging two separate offenses in separate counts is proper.^{65.5} However, where the statute enumerates several acts which, either separately or together, constitute the crime, the information in describing the crime may charge its commission by one or all of the acts enumerated.⁶⁶

Information held insufficient

Information, charging defendant with assuming and pretending to be "a certain officer from Dallas county, Texas," was held insufficient to sustain conviction for failure to designate officer alleged to have been personated.

Proof held not to support information

An information, charging defendant with falsely pretending to be an executive officer of the state, county, and city, namely a deputy sheriff, a constable, deputy constable and a policeman, was not supported by proof that he said he was an "officer," there being many other officers besides state officers.

Burden of proof

(1) The government has the burden of proof.

D.C.—Taylor v. U. S., 167 F.2d 752, 83 U.S.App.D.C. 215.

(2) Once the state has proved its case, the burden of proof is on accused to bring himself within one of the exceptions of the law.

Ga.—Loomis v. State, 51 S.E.2d 13, 78 Ga.App. 153.

Falseness of claimed character

(1) Evidence is insufficient where there is failure of proof that accused persons were not in fact officers or employees of the federal government such as they pretended.

Where accessories before the fact are declared by statutory provisions to be principals, an indictment may state the circumstances as in an indictment against an accessory before the fact; but it must contain an allegation charging accused as principal.⁶⁷

The allegations in the indictment which are descriptive of the offense must be proved as made.

Conformably to the rule applicable in criminal proceedings generally that a variance in a material matter is fatal and entitles defendant to an acquittal, see Indictments and Informations § 254, in a prosecution for false personation all allegations of the indictment which are descriptive of the offense must be proved as made;⁶⁸ and this is so even though it was not necessary to have made the allegation in the manner in which it was made.⁶⁹

§ 6. — Evidence

Every element of the offense must be proved by competent evidence and beyond a reasonable doubt.

To warrant a conviction under an indictment for the offense of false personation, it is essential that every element of the offense shall be proved,⁷⁰ by U.S.—U. S. v. McNaugh, C.C.A.N.Y., 42 F.2d 835.

(2) In prosecution for falsely assuming to be United States prohibition agent and obtaining certain amount from certain person as such, evidence was held to warrant finding that defendant was not prohibition agent.

U.S.—Haggerty v. U. S., C.C.A.Ill., 5 F.2d 224.

Intent

(1) Proof of criminal intent is required.

D.C.—Levine v. U. S., 261 F.2d 747, 104 U.S.App.D.C. 281.

(2) Evidence was held insufficient to support conviction for false personation of deputy constable when accused honestly believed himself entitled to such office.

Tex.—Stahmann v. State, 70 S.W.2d 709, 126 Tex.Cr. 192.

D.C.—Levine v. U. S., 261 F.2d 747, 104 U.S.App.D.C. 281.

Venue and corpus delicti

In false personation prosecution, state proved corpus delicti where evidence disclosed that crime was committed in Nashville when accused obtained automobile on rental contract from rental agency by representing that he was another person.

competent evidence,⁷¹ and the guilt of accused must be established by more than a mere presumption;⁷² as in other criminal prosecutions, the guilt of accused must be established beyond a reasonable doubt.⁷³

Circumstantial evidence may be sufficient to prove the offense.^{73.5}

§ 7. — Trial and Review

It is the duty of the court properly to instruct the jury as to the law of the case, and it is for the jury to determine the guilt of accused. The verdict should be in proper form.

As is true in criminal cases generally, see Criminal Law § 1189, on the trial of one accused of the offense of false personation it is the duty of the trial court to instruct the jury distinctly and precisely on the law of the case;⁷⁴ and, under proper instructions, it is for the jury to determine whether the actions of accused were such as to render him guilty.⁷⁵

71. Evidence held admissible

(1) In a prosecution for falsely and fraudulently impersonating and representing to be another to a bank and its cashier with intent fraudulently to obtain money from them, the check which the cashier swore that accused signed and presented to him for payment was admissible.

Ga.—Sturdivant v. State, 103 S.E. 837, 25 Ga.App. 428.

(2) Evidence that defendants were prepared to dynamite a Negro convention has been held admissible to show their willingness to use such methods to usurp police power, in a prosecution for exercising policeman's functions without authority. Ga.—Burke v. State, 47 S.E.2d 116, 76 Ga.App. 612.

(3) Other evidence. Pa.—Commonwealth v. Downer, 49 A.2d 516, 159 Pa.Super. 626.

25 C.J. p 581 note 62.

Unfavorable presumption

Where accused is charged with falsely impersonating an officer, and fails to produce evidence showing he is such an officer, presumption arises that evidence, if produced, would be unfavorable to him.

D.C.—Taylor v. U. S., 167 F.2d 752, 83 U.S.App.D.C. 215.

25 C.J. p 581 note 63.

Degree of proof generally see Criminal Law §§ 910-913.

Credulity of victim

Evidence is not rendered insufficient to sustain a conviction for impersonating a police officer because statements of accused to victim were such that only a very credulous person would believe them.

§ 2. Origin and History

Because the early common-law crime of cheating was confined to certain types of frauds, several English statutes were enacted to broaden the offense, and out of these statutes arose the crime now commonly known as false pretenses. Some states still recognize the common-law offense of cheating; and a number of jurisdictions have adopted the English statutory modifications or enacted statutes substantially similar.

The crime of obtaining property by false pretenses was unknown in the early common law.^{1,50}

As appears infra § 4, while cheating was an indictable offense at common law, no fraud could be the object of a criminal prosecution unless it was of a kind which in its nature was calculated to defraud numbers, as by the use of false weights or measures, false dice and the like. For this reason it was early perceived that some statutory provision was necessary in order to punish the great variety of frauds which could be practiced with impunity under the common law,² and a partial provision on the subject was made by the statute of 33 Henry VIII c 1.³

As this statute extended only to frauds committed by the use of some visible sign or token, as discussed infra § 4, there was enacted the statute of 30 George II c 24, which provided that all persons who knowingly and designedly by false pretenses should obtain from any person money or goods with the intent to cheat or defraud any person of the same should be deemed offenders; as a result of this provision, or equivalent provisions, in state statutes, persons could be prosecuted even where there was no visible token, but merely verbal pretenses.⁴ It was this statute that created the crime now commonly known as obtaining goods under false pretenses.⁵ Several English statutes were thereafter enacted to supply defects found therein,⁶ among them the statute of 52 George III c 64 § 1, under which the obtaining of choses in action as well as other property was included.⁷

In those jurisdictions of the United States in which the common law is in force, the common-law crime of cheating exists, with the same limitations as in England.⁸ In some jurisdictions, the statute of 33 Henry VIII,⁹ or subsequent English statutes,¹⁰ have been adopted as part of the common law, but in at least one jurisdiction it has been expressly held that, while common-law cheating has been recognized, the statutory modifications thereof have not been adopted.¹¹

It has been decided that a federal statute making the common law applicable to criminal offenses includes the statute of 30 George II c 24 and such amendments thereto as were enacted before the American Revolution.¹² In most jurisdictions there are statutes modeled on the English statutes, with minor differences,¹³ and, as will appear in appropriate places in this title, in a number of jurisdictions provisions have been added to these statutes, or additional statutes enacted punishing analogous frauds of various kinds. In other jurisdictions statutes more restricted in their operation than the English ones have been enacted.¹⁴

The offense of obtaining money or property by false pretenses has in some jurisdictions been included within the broader offense of swindling¹⁵ or theft,¹⁶ or assimilated to the crime of larceny,¹⁷ while in other jurisdictions a new statutory crime has been said to be created which includes false pretenses.^{17.5} Where the larceny or theft charged under such statutes is founded on false pretenses, the essential elements of the latter offense are not changed,¹⁸ nor are the rules of pleading it altered.¹⁹

Embezzlement is distinguished from swindling and obtaining money by false pretenses in Embezzlement § 1.

Forgery. A forgery is necessarily also a false pretense,²⁰ but the latter, when embodied in a writing, does not necessarily involve the former.²¹ False pretense and forgery are closely akin, both belonging historically to the family of offenses known to the common law as "cheats," and now so classed.^{21.5} False pretense is the heart of forgery, the essence of its being.^{21.10} The principal difference between the two, historically developed in the common law, is that forgery exclusively pertains to a writing, while false pretense covers fraudulent deceits by parol.^{21.15}

There is a marked distinction between forgery and obtaining property by a false writing.²² To sustain an indictment for forgery the instrument must be one which, if genuine, would create some right or liability, or, in other words, be of some legal effect;²³ to sustain an indictment for false pretense this is not necessary,²⁴ but the false writing need only be adapted to induce another to part with his property.²⁵

With respect to intent, a distinction is made between forgery and the obtaining of money by false pretenses, for while in a prosecution for false pretense it is necessary, in addition to proving the false pretenses, to show that they were made with an intent to cheat and defraud, in a prosecution for forgery the criminal intent to defraud goes with the act as an ingredient and a component part of it.²⁶ If, in signing another's name to an instrument, there is no intent on the part of accused to deceive others as to whose signature it is, but merely a misrepresentation as to authority, the offense is not forgery but "false pretenses."²⁷

Fraudulent conversion. The crimes of fraudulent conversion of property and of cheating by fraudulent pretenses are separate and distinct offenses.^{27.5}

Larceny; theft. The crime of obtaining money or goods by false pretenses is closely allied, or analogous, to that of larceny,²⁸ and it has been said that the statutes denouncing it and like offenses were designed for the fuller protection of personal property and in aid of the laws against larceny and theft.²⁹ However, the two offenses are generally distinguishable,³⁰ although the distinction is very fine where the obtaining of the money or property is accomplished by fraud, trick, or device.³¹

Purpose of statute with respect to statutory crime of stealing is to eliminate the technical distinctions between offenses of larceny, embezzlement, and obtaining money under false pretenses.

The distinction between the crimes of obtaining by false pretenses and larceny lies in the intention with which the owner parts with the property; if the owner, in parting with the property, intends to invest accused with the title as well as the possession, the latter has committed the crime of obtaining the property by false pretenses, provided the means by which it is acquired are such as in law are false pretenses, but if the intention of the owner is to invest accused with the mere possession of the property, and the latter, with the requisite intent, receives it and converts it to his own use, the crime is larceny.³² In a few cases the test applied has been not the intent of the owner to pass title, but whether he in fact passed title;³³ and in at least one jurisdiction the distinction has been held to rest in the time of forming the criminal intent.^{33.5}

When the property is delivered to accused by another than the owner, the question whether the obtaining constitutes larceny or false pretense depends not only on the intent with which such person delivers the property but also on his authority over it; if he intends to pass the title and has authority to do so, the obtaining with intent to convert it is the crime of obtaining by false pretense,³⁴ the intent

Swindling and theft by false pretext in Texas

(1) In a number of cases in Texas, or applying the law of Texas, it has been held that the distinction between the offense of swindling and theft by false pretext depends on whether the injured person was induced, or intended, to part with both title and possession of his property, in which event the case is swindling, or whether he intended to part only with possession, in which event it will be theft by false pretext.

U.S.—Akers v. Schofield, C.C.A.Tex., 167 F.2d 718, certiorari denied 69 S.Ct. 47, 335 U.S. 823, 93 L.Ed. 378.

25 C.J. p 657 note 25 [d].

(2) However, it has been said that the statement that if title was intended to pass the offense cannot be theft is necessarily true only where the question is whether the offense is theft by a bailee or swindling, and that nearly all the cases making such statement involve that question.

Tex.—Sherman v. State, 62 S.W.2d 146, 124 Tex.Cr. 146—Contreras v. State, 39 S.W.2d 62, 118 Tex.Cr. 626—Anderson v. State, 177 S.W. 85, 77 Tex.Cr. 31.

(3) In accordance with the latter view, it has been held that the fact that title was intended to pass does not prevent the offense from being theft by false pretext, where the representations are as to future happenings, and thus will not support a charge of swindling but will support a charge of theft by false pretext.

(4) The fact that the statutes overlap to a certain extent is recognized by the statutory provision that, where property is taken in such a manner as to come within the meaning of theft, the swindling statute shall not be deemed to take the case out of the operation of the theft statute.

Tex.—King v. State, 213 S.W.2d 541, 152 Tex.Cr. 255—McCuistion v. State, 158 S.W.2d 527, 143 Tex.Cr. 283, 141 A.L.R. 205—Baldwin v. State, 104 S.W.2d 872, 132 Tex.Cr. 427—*New v. (5) In view of the latter statutory provision, it is held that, if property is obtained in such manner as to come within the meaning of theft or some other offense, the prosecution should be for theft or such other offense and not for swindling.

Tex.—Gibbs v. State, 253 S.W.2d 1002, 158 Tex.Cr. 145—McCuistion v. State, supra—De Blanc v. State, supra.

Session, p. 362, Vernon's Ann.P.C. art. 1549, where property, money, or other articles of value enumerated in the definition of swindling are obtained in such manner that the acquisition thereof constitutes both swindling and some other offense, the party thus offending is amenable to prosecution at the state's election for either swindling or such other offense.

Tex.—Whitehead v. State, 185 S.W. 2d 725, 148 Tex.Cr. 190.

(8) The statute is aimed at acquisition of property by criminally deceitful pretenses which are relied on by persons swindled and which are inducement moving such person to part with his property.

U.S.—Westfall Oldsmobile, Inc. v. U. S., C.A.Tex., 243 F.2d 409.

(9) The crime of theft by false pretext is considered generally in the C.J.S. title Larceny.

Larceny by bailee

The mere delivery of property into the possession of a bailee and the bailee's subsequent conversion of the property to his own use constitutes "larceny by bailee" and not the offense of "obtaining money by false pretenses."

If a loan of money is obtained by false pretenses, under an agreement for the return of the identical money, and the borrower feloniously converts it, he is guilty of larceny, as the owner did not intend to part with the title to the money lent;³⁵ but if the lender did not expect to receive back the money lent, but only an equal amount in other money, then the conversion would constitute the crime of obtaining by false pretense.³⁶

The doctrine of asportation in larceny has no place in the offense of obtaining by false pretense.³⁷

Robbery. The crime of robbery and the crime of obtaining property under false pretenses are distinguishable in that in the former property is obtained from the owner by means of force or violence, actual or constructive, whereas in the latter the owner parts with the title to the property voluntarily, under false pretenses.³⁸

§ 4. Common-Law Offense of Cheating and Statutory Modification Thereof

Cheating was an offense at common law where the act was of such a nature as to affect the public and that common prudence could not guard against it. To constitute a public cheat any fraudulent device was sufficient; but to constitute a private cheat the use of a false token or symbol was essential. The false token originally required had to be such as, when not false, was commonly accepted by the public for what it purported to be, but this requirement was abolished by a statute making counterfeit letters or false privy tokens sufficient.

The crime of cheating was not very clearly defined in the early common law, the term "cheating" being applied to defrauding, and even to the attempt to defraud, by means of any artful device

whatever.³⁹ While cheating was in proper cases an indictable offense,⁴⁰ the offense by no means included all cheating.⁴¹ To bring an act within the offense, two things were necessary: (1) The act must have been of such a nature as to affect the public.⁴² (2) It must have been of such a nature that common prudence could not have guarded against it.⁴³

In other cases in which a person was defrauded, the transaction was considered to amount only to an unfair dealing and an imposition on a particular individual by which he would not have suffered but for his own carelessness, and such person could look only to his civil remedy for the redress of his injury.⁴⁴ Thus, it is apparent that common-law cheating is a distinct offense from what is now the offense of obtaining goods by false pretenses.⁴⁵

In a prosecution for cheating it was necessary to allege and prove an intent to cheat and defraud.⁴⁶ Although, as previously stated, the term "cheating" was, in the early common law, applied even to an attempt to defraud, it has been held essential to a cheat that some one be actually defrauded.⁴⁷ It has also been held that the obtaining of only such property as is the subject of larceny will render a person indictable for a cheat;⁴⁸ thus, the offense does not include a case where the property of which the owner was deprived is real property.⁴⁹

A cheat at common law is a misdemeanor.⁵⁰

Common-law cheats have been divided into two classes: (1) Those directed against the government or immediately injuring the interests of the public, usually denominated "public cheats." (2) Those employed directly against individuals, or what are commonly termed "private cheats."⁵¹

In public cheats the use of any fraudulent device was sufficient to constitute the crime at common law,⁵² and it was not necessary that a false symbol or token should have been utilized.⁵³ Comprehended within the class of frauds of a public nature are cheats by officials,⁵⁴ and frauds immediately injuring the interests of the government or the public, although arising in the course of some particular transaction or contract with private individuals.⁵⁵

A private cheat, at common law, may be defined as the defrauding of any person by means of a false symbol or token, such as would commonly be accepted by the public for what it purports to represent;⁵⁶ it is such a cheat as arises in the course of dealings with individuals by the use of false tokens or symbols having the semblance of public authenticity and calculated to deceive the public at large.⁵⁷

False token as element of private cheat generally. As indicated by the preceding definitions, in order to constitute the crime of cheating at common law in the class of cases known as private cheats, a false token or symbol was necessary.⁵⁸ The symbol or token used to defraud must be of such a character as, when not false, is commonly accepted by the public for what it purports to represent.⁵⁹ So, the use of a false trade-mark to defraud the buyer,⁶⁰ the selling of goods by false or counterfeit marks,⁶¹ the use of false weights and measures,⁶² and playing with false dice⁶³ are indictable. On the other hand, the drawing of a check on a bank in which one has no funds is not, under the common law, a cheat,⁶⁴ and this is the rule also as to the passing of a false promissory note;⁶⁵ but, since bank notes pass currently, the passing of a false bank note is a cheat.⁶⁶

False personation as token. It has been said that if one represents himself to be another person, by which representation he accomplishes a cheat, his visible presence is a false token.⁶⁷ It has been held, however, that where a married man pretended, under a fictitious name, to an unmarried woman, that he was single, and by this means, together with his promise to marry her, obtained money from her, he was not a false token.⁶⁸

Words as token. Mere words do not, under the common law, amount to a token.⁶⁹ Accordingly, a fraud effected by false affirmation or naked lie was not an indictable cheat at common law,⁷⁰ it being at most a mere private injury.⁷¹

Statutory modification as to token. As appears supra § 2, in order to remedy the defect in the common law which punished only such frauds of a private nature as were effected by a symbol or token calculated to defraud the public, the statute of 33 Henry VIII c 1 was enacted, making it an indictable offense for any person falsely and deceitfully to obtain money or goods in another man's name by color or means of counterfeit letter or false privy token. Under this and similar statutes, a false token of some kind was still necessary to constitute cheating,⁷² and a fraud perpetrated by mere false words alone was a civil injury only and not indictable;⁷³ and, inasmuch as the statute related to "privy tokens and counterfeit letters in other men's names," it has been held that even a writing would not suffice unless it was in the name of another, and of such a character as to afford more credit than the mere assertion of the party defrauding.⁷⁴ As appears supra § 2, the subsequent English statute of 30 George II c 24 abolished the need for a visible token, and created the crime that is now commonly known as obtaining money or property by false pretenses.

§ 5. Statutory Provisions

- a. In general; validity
- b. Construction, operation, and effect

a. In General; Validity

Statutes denouncing the crime of obtaining property by false pretenses, and analogous offenses, have been variously held either constitutional or unconstitutional.

The crime of obtaining property by false pretenses, as has already been stated in § 2, was created by the statute of 30 George II c 24 § 1, was extended in its operation by subsequent English statutes, and is an offense in the various jurisdictions in the United States under statutory provisions based generally on these English statutes, with certain modifications, sometimes enlarging and sometimes restricting its scope.

Constitutionality and validity of statutes. The constitutionality and validity of a number of statutes denouncing as a crime the obtaining of money or property by false pretenses, and analogous offenses, have been upheld as against a variety of contentions,⁷⁵ as, for example, that they offended against the due process clause⁷⁶ or the provision against slavery or involuntary servitude,⁷⁷ that they denied equal protection,⁷⁸ or that they violated provisions respecting imprisonment for debt.⁷⁹ So, a statute making the execution of a check with knowledge of the insufficiency of funds,⁸⁰ or the failure to pay such draft within a stated period after notice of dishonor,⁸¹ prima facie evidence of intent to defraud has been held not unconstitutional.

On the other hand, various statutes or provisions have been held invalid or unconstitutional,⁸² including a statute making it unlawful to obtain money or credit by check or order which is not paid and making the fact that there are not sufficient funds on deposit at the time of presentation prima facie evidence of fraudulent intent at the time of issuance,⁸³ although there is authority to the contrary,⁸⁴ and statutes denouncing the execution of a check without sufficient funds regardless of fraudulent intent or knowledge of the insufficiency⁸⁵ and providing for the dismissal of the prosecution on payment of the check.⁸⁶ A bad-check statute is invalid in so far as it authorizes guilt to be predicated on acts of third parties not connected with the alleged crime and over which accused has no control.^{86.5}

Statutes denouncing the obtaining of property by false pretenses, being penal in nature, are to be strictly construed in favor of accused. General principles of statutory construction, including the principle of ejusdem generis, have been applied to such statutes.

Statutes denouncing the obtaining of money or property by false pretenses or the commission of similar offenses, being penal in nature, are to be strictly construed in favor of accused;⁸⁷ and although such statutes are very general in their character and very broad in their provisions, they are not intended to include every case of fraud and dishonesty by which one person gets advantage over another.⁸⁸ It has been said, however, to be the true policy neither to restrict the interpretation of such a statute within too narrow limits nor to explain it away to the encouragement of fraud;⁸⁹ and such a statute will be so construed as to give it effect rather than to render it meaningless.⁹⁰

An amendment of a bad-check statute has been held to have no retroactive application to crimes committed prior thereto or to judgments which have become final.^{90.5}

Ejusdem generis. Where a statute enumerates certain kinds of false pretenses and adds "or by any other false pretenses," the "other" pretenses intended by the statute are only those of a kindred nature to those which are enumerated.⁹¹ This rule has no application where the statute does not attempt an enumeration of the pretenses that shall be held criminal;⁹² and so, where a statute punishing the obtaining of a thing by a false symbol or token, or false writing, etc., also contains a general clause against obtaining it by "any false pretense," or a clause of equivalent import, the offense may be committed in words, without the use of such false symbol or token or false writing, etc.⁹³

Writing. The word "writing," as used in such a statute, means some instrument, or at least a letter, or something in writing, purporting to be the act of another, or certainly of some person;⁹⁴ and it includes printing, lithographing, or other modes of representing words and letters.⁹⁵ The term "false writing" will not be construed to mean an unwarranted or false use of a genuine writing.⁹⁶

Effect on other statutes. The operation and effect of statutes dealing with the crimes under consideration on other statutes of a similar nature, or related statutes, have been determined in several jurisdictions.⁴

§ 6. Elements of Offenses in General

To constitute the crime of obtaining property by false pretenses, there must be a false representation of a past or existing fact, made by the accused or someone instigated by him with knowledge of its falsity, and intended and adapted to deceive, a reliance thereon, an actual defrauding, and an obtaining of something of value without compensation.

Generally speaking, to constitute the crime of obtaining property by false pretenses there must be a false representation or statement of a past or existing fact, made by accused or someone instigated by him, with knowledge of its falsity and with intent to deceive and defraud, and adapted to deceive the person to whom it is made; and there must be, further, a reliance on such false representation or statement, an actual defrauding, and an obtaining of something of value by accused or someone in his behalf, without compensation to the person from whom it is obtained.⁵ Another statement is that

In Alabama, Acts Spec.Sess.1921 p 47, making it "unlawful . . . to obtain money or other property or credit by check, draft or order which is not paid," and expressly repealing conflicting acts, does not repeal the provision of Acts 1915 p 319, prohibiting "the obtaining of money, property, or thing of value, or the making, uttering or delivery of any check . . . with intent to defraud," as applied to the fraudulent issuance of a check.

Ala.—Gustin v. State, 99 So. 54, 19 Ala.App. 558, followed in 99 So. 925, 19 Ala.App. 682.

In California

(1) The statute defining the crime of grand theft has in effect repealed the identical provisions of the statute denouncing the crime of obtaining money or property by false pretenses.

Cal.—People v. Jackson, 74 P.2d 1085, 24 C.A.2d 182—People v. Carter, 21 P.2d 129, 131 C.A. 177.

(2) It likewise superseded provisions of the statute respecting false financial statements.

Cal.—People v. Breyer, 34 P.2d 1065, 139 C.A. 547, hearing denied 34 P.2d 1067, 139 C.A. 547.

(3) However, the change did not repeal the provision as to the quantum of evidence required for a conviction for that variety of grand theft consisting of obtaining money or property by false pretenses.

Cal.—People v. Edwards, 24 P.2d 183, 133 C.A. 335—People v. Carter, supra.

People v. Fawver, 77 P.2d 325, 29 C.A.2d, Supp., 775.

(4) The amendment to the forgery statute did not affect the statute relating to uttering fictitious instruments.

Cal.—People v. Carmona, 251 P. 315, 80 C.A. 159.

In Kentucky statute against obtaining money by false pretenses is repealed by subsequent criminal statute dealing with giving worthless checks, to extent to which the two statutes conflict, but no further.

Ky.—Tartar v. Commonwealth, 102 S.W.2d 971, 267 Ky. 502.

In Missouri the statute providing for punishment of one who utters a check knowing that he has not sufficient funds in bank to cover it takes that particular offense out of the operation of statute providing generally with respect to offense of obtaining property by false pretenses.

Mo.—State v. Richman, 148 S.W.2d 796, 347 Mo. 595.

In South Carolina an indictment under Cr.Code 1912 § 208, making it a misdemeanor to draw a check when drawer has no funds on deposit, was held invalid, as Act March 1, 1923, 33 U.S.St. at L. p 120, making fraudulent intent an element of that offense, repealed that section.

S.C.—State v. Moore, 122 S.E. 672, 128 S.C. 192.

In Tennessee the code provision respecting the obtaining of money by false pretenses, in so far as it dealt with fraudulent checks, was superseded and repealed by the act covering the entire field of the fraudulent obtaining of money or property by means of a worthless check.

offense must coexist,^{6,20} they need not all occur at the same time.^{6,25} A false pretense is essential,⁷ the criminal character of the act alleged to constitute a crime being determined by the means used in obtaining the property.⁸ False pretense has been held to include the elements of trick, cunning, dissembling, and unfair ways by which another is deceived.^{8,5}

The transactions between the parties must be considered as a whole in determining whether the essential elements of the offense of obtaining by false pretenses are present and coexisting.^{8,10}

§ 7. Intent

A specific intent to defraud is commonly regarded as essential; but the intent need not be to accomplish the particular result achieved, or, except where the statute so requires, to cause ultimate loss to the victim. The intent must exist when the representations are made or the property is obtained; it need not be directed against the legal owner.

A specific intent to cheat and defraud is commonly regarded as essential to the commission of the crime of obtaining property by false pretenses.⁹ Misrepresentation of facts, therefore, made innocently or inadvertently cannot form the basis for 25 C.J. p 603 note 8 [a], [b].

General malice or criminal intent is insufficient; specific intent to defraud must be present.

Iowa.—State v. Huckins, 234 N.W. 554, 212 Iowa 283.

Aiding and abetting

Intent being a necessary element of offense of obtaining money and property by false representations and pretenses, it is likewise a necessary element of the offense of aiding and abetting another in obtaining money and property by false representations and pretenses.

Mich.—People v. Smith, 260 N.W. 911, 271 Mich. 553.

Encumbrance on property

(1) Intent is an essential element of the offense of obtaining money by false pretense or representation that property is unencumbered.

Mass.—Commonwealth v. Bannon, 150 N.E. 7, 254 Mass. 320.

(2) Gist of offense of obtaining money or property through false pretenses, based on failure to notify purchaser of lien or encumbrance, was the intent of seller to cheat and defraud purchaser.

Miss.—Simmons v. State, 135 So. 196, 160 Miss. 582.

prosecution for obtaining property by false pretenses.^{9.5} Under a few statutes, however, such intent has not been deemed to be an ingredient of the crime,¹⁰ it being sufficient if the act be done designedly.¹¹

The intent to defraud need not be directed against any particular person;¹² thus, it need not be directed against the legal owner, it being sufficient if directed against any one who is in lawful possession of the goods, or who parts with property in reliance on the pretense.¹³

It is not necessary that the intent be to accomplish the particular result achieved; if the particular result fails and another thing of value is obtained by means of the false representations, it is sufficient;¹⁴ nor, except where the statute requires such intent,¹⁵ need the intent be to cause ultimate loss to the victim, since he is defrauded by the mere obtaining of his property by a false pretense, although he may not suffer an ultimate loss.¹⁶

It is essential that the fraudulent intent shall have existed at the time the fraudulent representation or pretenses were made or when the thing of value was obtained by reason of such pretenses.¹⁷ The false pretense need not originally have been made for the purpose of defrauding, if it is reiterated for that purpose.¹⁸ Since the intent provided for by the statutes is the intent to defraud another, and not to benefit accused, it is no defense that accused did not intend to derive any advantage from the obtaining of the property.¹⁹ Under at least one statute, it has been held that if there was a willful design to receive a benefit or cause an injury, it is immaterial that when the property is obtained it actually produces no benefit or injury.²⁰

It has been held that, where all the elements are present, the intention with which the victim parted with his property is immaterial.²¹

§ 8. Nature of Pretense or Fact Represented

Unless the statute provides otherwise, the pretense must be a representation as to an existing fact or past event, and not as to something to take place in the future; and it must be a representation as to a material fact. Only a single fact need be misrepresented.

Except where the statute provides otherwise,^{21.50} the pretense relied on to establish the offense must be a representation as to a present or existing fact, or a past fact or event, and may not be as to something to take place in the future.²² If, however, the

Mere equity of redemption

Where defendant, prosecuted for obtaining money under false pretenses, gave a mortgage on an automobile then in possession of another holding under a bill of sale to secure a former loan, it was held, notwithstanding defendant had an equity of redemption in the former mortgage, that his representation as to ownership constituted a false pretense. Nev.—State v. Bacha, 194 P. 1066, 44 Nev. 373.

Option to purchase

In a prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses by selling real estate to another on the false pretense of ownership, defendant is not relieved of criminal liability by the fact that he had an option to purchase the property on which he made default, if the purchaser was induced to buy and part with his money on the faith of the representation of ownership.

sents that property is unencumbered,³⁶ or that certain land is open to homestead entry,³⁷ or, on the sale of a mortgage, falsely represents that it is a first lien on the mortgaged property,³⁸ or that it is a lien on a dwelling house,³⁹ or makes false representations as to his business⁴⁰ or business connections,⁴¹ as where he represents himself to be in a situation or business in which he is not.^{41.5}

A false representation as to an act done or omitted by the prosecutor himself,⁴² or the advisability of the prosecutor's doing an act,⁴³ has been held not within the statute.

Warranty or contract combined with representation of fact. An indictment will not lie on a mere false warranty, or on representations to be implied from mere promises or contract obligations.⁴⁴ Where there is a warranty or contract on the part of accused, and there are also false representations of fact, an indictment will lie, provided the representations, and not the warranty or contract, induced the act of the other party.⁴⁵ There are, however, earlier cases holding that if a warranty is added to the false pretense the offense is not com-

Failure to perform contract. The mere fact that one does not return money after failing to perform a contract, for the performance of which the money was paid in advance, does not constitute theft by false pretenses.^{46.5}

Puffing statements. Persons selling or exchanging property do not commit an offense merely by making use of "puffing" statements or "seller's talk."⁴⁷

A misrepresentation of price has been held an element of false pretense.^{47.5}

§ 9. — Simple Promise or Promise Combined with Representation of Fact

Under most authorities, a promise, although false, will generally not serve as a pretense; but, where a promise is combined with a representation of fact, there is a sufficient pretense unless the prosecutor relied wholly on the promise and not at all on the representation.

Since it relates to a future event, a promise to do something, even though false, or made without the intention of performing it, is generally not sufficient to serve as a pretense,⁴⁸ however false or

Defective title

Where accused's title to land is defective and unmarketable, his representation of ownership will not warrant a conviction.

Note constituting mortgage

In prosecution for cheating and swindling by false representation that realty mortgaged was free from encumbrances, a note given by defendant on back of which appeared "This note is to bear interest at the rate of seven per cent. Said note is given against my residence at 10 Candler Road—Brookhaven, Georgia," followed by signature of defendant, was sufficient to constitute a mortgage.

fraudulent it may be;⁴⁹ and this is the rule even though the defrauded party was induced by such promise to part with his property.⁵⁰

erty by means of false promises, or promises made without the intention of performing them, may be indictable.⁵¹ This is on the ground that such a promise is a misrepresentation of a state of mind, and thus a misrepresentation of existing fact.^{51.5}

Promise combined with representation of fact. While, as shown above, the crime is not committed by a mere false promise, a false statement of fact may become effective only by being coupled with a false promise.⁵² Where this is the case, the mere fact that the false representation of fact is accompanied by a promise does not render it innocuous or relieve it of its criminal character;⁵³ the statement of fact and the promise may be considered as together constituting the false pretense and a conviction may follow, or, if the statement of fact and the promise can be separated, and prosecutor relied in part on the former, the promise may be disregarded and accused may be convicted on the statement of fact,⁵⁴ notwithstanding he may also have relied in part on the promise and would not have yielded to the false statement alone.⁵⁵

On the other hand, even though the promise is coupled with a statement of an existing fact, yet if the property was obtained by reason of the prosecutor's reliance on the promise as the sole inducement, no offense is committed.⁵⁶

§ 10. — Statement of Intention, Expectation, or Desire

Authorities disagree as to whether a false statement as to accused's intention is a false pretense as to an existing fact. A false statement of expectation or desire, or a mere prediction, is not a false pretense.

Some authorities hold that a state of mind is a fact, and that, therefore, a false statement as to the intention of accused is a false pretense as to an existing fact,⁵⁷ while others regard a representation of intention as not within the statute.⁵⁸ Neverthe-

False representation that accused owned bonds and had arranged with bank to handle them, coupled with promise to repay money given accused out of proceeds of bonds, was held to support conviction of obtaining money under false pretenses as against contention that conviction could not be sustained because there was no representation of existing fact.

The statement of an opinion or judgment, if understood to be such, will not sustain a prosecution for obtaining property by false pretenses.

The statement of an opinion, judgment, or estimate,⁶³ if understood to be such,⁶⁴ will not sustain a prosecution for obtaining property by false pretenses. However, the mere coupling of expressions of opinion with false representations of fact does not relieve from responsibility for the representations,⁶⁵ and an indictment for the offense may be predicated on a representation relating partly to matters of fact and partly to matters of opinion, where it appears that the loss ensued through acting on the representation as to the fact.⁶⁶ Where one represents as true a thing which he knows not to be true, such a representation falls within the statute, even though in some situations the truth or untruth of the statement might be a matter of opinion.⁶⁷

§ 13. — Statement as to Financial Ability or Condition

False representations as to the financial ability or pecuniary condition of accused or of a third person are within the statutes in their usual form; and particular types of such statements are embraced within express statutory provisions.

False representations as to the financial ability or pecuniary condition of accused,⁷² or of a third person,⁷³ are within the statutes in their usual form, unless they are merely expressions of opinion.⁷⁴ The false pretense may be based on the representation of a lack of financial ability.⁷⁵

Under express statutory provisions in some jurisdictions, it is an offense to obtain any money in whole or in part on the faith of a written statement of the financial condition or responsibility of the person so obtaining such money,⁷⁶ to make, or cause to be made, false statements in writing with respect to the financial condition or means or ability to pay of the person himself or any other person, firm, or corporation, in whom or which he is interested or for whom or which he is acting,⁷⁷ to cause or procure others to report falsely as to one's wealth or mercantile character,⁷⁸ to obtain credit by false representations as to wealth or mercantile correspondence and connections,⁷⁹ or to induce another to become bail, indorser, or security on any instrument for the payment of money or performance of any personal duty by false representations as to solvency.⁸⁰ Such statutes are not intended to be used as a cloak for imprisonment for debt.^{80.5}

Purpose

In passing the statute, the legislature had primarily in mind the kind of written statement as to financial condition which is ordinarily referred to as a "financial statement" wherein are set forth all assets and liabilities of the person or corporation making the statement.

Okl.—Group v. State, 236 P.2d 997, 94 Okl. Cr. 401.

"False financial statement" defined

Under statute making it an offense for any person knowingly to make a "false financial statement" for purpose of procuring credit, quoted words mean false statement of assets and liabilities knowingly made and calculated to defraud.

Oil on land

(1) A conviction of grand theft based on representations allegedly made by defendant to the effect that statement is more than a mere opinion and involves a statement of fact known to be false.⁸² A misrepresentation as to the identity or species of a thing is a false pretense within the statute;⁸³ but it has been held that a mere misnaming of property offered in exchange, its value in nowise depending on its name, is not a false pretense.⁸⁴

Where a person sells an article by weight and falsely represents the weight to be greater than it is, and thereby obtains payment for a quantity greater than that delivered, he commits the offense, especially if some token or artifice is used to throw the buyer off his guard.⁸⁵

Patent and latent defects. If the defect in quality or condition of the thing sold is visible or discoverable by ordinary observation, it has been held the representation is not a false pretense; in such case the purchaser is not deceived and the rule caveat emptor applies.⁸⁶ However, where visible defects are called to the seller's attention at the time of the sale, and he makes a false statement in reference to the character or cause of such defects, for the purpose of dissipating doubt or suspicion in the mind of the purchaser, which statement induces the purchase, there is a false pretense.⁸⁷ If the defect is not visible, or cannot be discovered by ordinary observation, and the false representation induces the purchase, other elements of the offense being present, there is a false pretense, and in such case the rule of caveat emptor does not apply.⁸⁸

Nature or capacity of animals. It has been held indictable to represent falsely that a cow has a certain milk-yielding capacity,⁸⁹ or that a horse or cow is sound,⁹⁰ or sound and gentle.⁹¹

Statements as to the value or worth of the thing given in exchange for the property of the prosecutor, although false, will not, if falling within the category of "puffing" statements or "seller's talk," sustain an indictment for false pretense;⁹² and where a statement of value is given as an opinion merely, it cannot be regarded as a foundation for such an indictment.⁹³ However, where one makes a representation of value as an existing fact, other elements of the offense being present, there is a false pretense.⁹⁴ Whether or not an assertion of value is to be regarded as an expression of opinion or a statement of fact depends on circumstances.⁹⁵

§ 15. — Tendency to Deceive

The early rule that the pretense must be calculated to impose on a person of ordinary prudence and caution is not now usually recognized as correct, the general rule now being that if the pretense did deceive the victim or was calculated to deceive one of his capacity in the same situation, it is sufficient; and it is not necessary that the injured person should have made an investigation as to the falsity of the pretense, to make it indictable.

Although the language of many of the statutes, such as those denouncing the obtaining of property "by any false pretense," is so broad that taken literally it would include every misrepresentation, however absurd or irrational, and however easily detected, courts, in the construction of such statutes, have, to a greater or less degree, narrowed their scope,⁹⁶ and laid down the broad rule that the elements of value would be so numerous and varied that farmers and real estate men would differ in their estimates."

the false pretense must be calculated to deceive.⁹⁷

According to some of the decisions, especially the earlier ones, the pretense, to be indictable, must be such as is calculated to impose on a person of ordinary prudence and caution;⁹⁸ but this is not now usually recognized as the correct rule,⁹⁹ although it is still true that a pretense calculated to impose on a prudent person is sufficiently deceptive.¹ The view now generally taken is that false pretense statutes are designed to protect not only the ordinarily wary and prudent, but also the ignorant, credulous, and foolish,² so that if the pretense did in fact deceive the person to whom it was made,³ or was calculated to deceive one of the capacity and understanding, and in the situation, of the complaining witness,⁴ it is sufficient, it being said that practically it is impossible to estimate a false pretense otherwise than by its effect.⁵

Caveat emptor

Where worthless certificates "were ingeniously designed and calculated

Even under this view, however, it is generally held that, where the pretense is not calculated to deceive, but is absurd, incredible, or irrational,⁶ as where it is an improbable lie,⁷ or a mere idle tale, or a device so shallow as to be incapable of imposing on any person,⁸ it is insufficient.

A number of cases have held that if the person injured had, at the very time the representation was made and acted on, the means at hand of detecting its falsity, there is no false pretense within the statute,⁹ unless some pretense, device, or trick was used to prevent his using the means he had;¹⁰ but it is generally regarded as not necessary that the injured party should have conducted an investigation as to the falsity of the pretense, to make it indictable.¹¹

Capacity of party defrauded, and surrounding circumstances. With reference to the deceptiveness of the pretense, the ability of the person to whom it was made to detect its falsity,¹² which is to be determined from his age, mental condition, and station in life,¹³ is to be considered, as are the relations between accused and the person defrauded,¹⁴ and the general circumstances under which the representations were made.¹⁵

§ 16. Falsity of Pretense

The pretense must be false at the time it is made and the property is obtained.

The pretense, to be indictable, must be false;¹⁶ and the falsity must be subjective as well as ob-

Since the crime consists not only in making false representations but in obtaining property thereby, it follows that, although the pretense is false when made, yet if it becomes true at the time when the prosecutor relies thereon and the property is obtained, the crime is not committed.²⁰ The fact that accused might be estopped from denying the truth of his representation, does not render it true,

Where one falsely represented to a railroad agent that he had loaded a car with pipe, thereby obtaining a bill of lading thereon, every step thereafter based on such bill was fraudulent, so that when he presented it to the agent at the point of destination the issuance by the latter, believing the bill was genuine, of another bill for reshipment to a consignee at a third point was but a substitution of one fraudulent bill for another, and its use in obtaining property from another was use of a false pretense; as against the contention that the state was estopped from setting up the false and fraudulent character of the bills of lading on the ground that they were in fact issued by agents of the company, and were to that extent genuine.

authorities this is not a clear statement of the rule, and it is only when some symbol or token is used in connection with misleading conduct that a false statement in words is not essential.³²

Since promises are not within the statute, see supra § 9, if the act of accused implies only a promise it is not indictable.³³

§ 19. — Nondisclosure of Truth

Mere silence or suppression of the truth, or withholding of knowledge, is generally held insufficient to constitute a false pretense; but it has also been held that suppression of a fact by one who should disclose it is sufficient.

It is generally held that mere silence or suppression of the truth, or a mere withholding of knowledge on which another may act, is not sufficient to constitute false pretense;³⁴ there must be active, affirmative, false representations.³⁵ On the other hand, it has been held that the suppression of a fact by one who is bound to disclose it, or who gives information of other facts which are likely to mislead for want of communication of that fact, is a false pretense.³⁶

Where, after learning of the falsity of a representation made by him innocently, accused obtains property on the strength of that misrepresentation, his nondisclosure of the truth amounts to a false pretense.³⁷

§ 20. — False Token or Writing in General

Under the usual form of statute, no false token or writing is required for the commission of the offense.

To constitute the offense under the usual form of the statutes, no false token or writing need be used, the general rule being, as appears supra §§ 17, 18, that the offense may be committed by mere words or acts.³⁸ It is common, however, for the statutes to provide specifically against obtaining by a false symbol or token or false or counterfeit writing;³⁹ and under some statutes, if a false pretense is expressed in language and is not accompanied by a false token § 21. — Worthless Checks, Orders, Bank Bills, Etc.

- a. In general
- b. Worthless check statutes generally
- c. Present or past consideration; past indebtedness
- d. Postdated check
- e. Stopping payment

a. In General

The giving of a worthless check with knowledge of its worthlessness is generally deemed a false pretense.

The presentation of false warrants or orders, or certain warrants or other instruments illegally obtained,⁴¹ and the passing of worthless bank notes or bank bills,⁴² constitute false pretenses. So, too, the passing of Confederate paper money,⁴³ accompanied by representations that such money is good and lawful money of the United States,⁴⁴ is within the statute against false pretenses.

The specific acts of making, uttering, and delivering a worthless check did not constitute a crime at common law.^{44.5} Whether a prosecution for issuing, uttering, passing, or delivering a worthless check is brought under a statute such as those discussed hereafter in this section, or under a more general statute denouncing the obtaining of money or property by false pretenses, it is usually held essential that the acts involved constitute some form of false representation.⁴⁵ According to most authorities, the giving of a worthless check or draft, or a check or draft which the accused has no reason to suppose will be honored, is a false pretense,⁴⁶ even though no verbal misrepresentation is made as to the instrument,⁴⁷ the giving of such check or draft being itself a representation, symbol, or token

Receipt

Where defendant contractor paid lumber bill by check on insufficient bank account, obtained receipt, and then stopped payment on his check, it was held that the receipt, when presented to prosecuting witness, who paid defendant a balance under his contract in reliance thereon, was a "false token."

Draft given by accused to auctioneer in payment of cattle bid on by accused, which contained nothing false within itself, was not an accompanying "false token or writing" within statute precluding conviction for obtaining property under false pretenses unless statement of a pretense is accompanied by use of a false token or writing, except by production of specified evidence. Cal.—People v. Katcher, 217 P.2d 757, 97 C.A.2d 209.

Check issued by victims

The check by which victims paid to accused the money obtained by false pretenses was not a "false token or writing" within statute requiring corroboration of complaining witness' testimony to sustain conviction of grand theft, where money was obtained by false pretenses expressed in language unaccompanied by such token or writing.

Cal.—People v. Beilfuss, 138 P.2d 332, 59 C.A.2d 83, certiorari denied 64 S.Ct. 529, 321 U.S. 746, 88 L.Ed. 1048.

that accused has money or credit with the drawee,⁴⁸ to the amount of its face value,⁴⁹ and, therefore, a false representation of the existence of a present fact.^{49.5}

According to other authorities, however, simply giving a check on a bank without any representation by the drawer that he has funds in the bank on which the check is drawn, or that the check will be paid by the bank on presentation, does not constitute a criminal offense.⁵⁰ Some authorities have held that the mere giving of a check on a bank in which there are no funds for its payment will not constitute a criminal false pretense when the person giving it has reason to believe that it will be honored on presentation.⁵¹

Where the giving of a worthless check or draft is accompanied by false representations as to its payment, accused is guilty.⁵² A sight draft drawn by accused on himself in payment of goods bought amounts only to a representation of future ability to pay, although it carries with it the implied representation of ability to pay, and a seller parting with his goods on the strength thereof does not rely on a false representation constituting a false pretense.⁵³

b. Worthless Check Statutes Generally

- (1) In general
- (2) Elements of offense

(1) In General

According to the varying language of particular statutes, it may be made a crime to draw, utter, pass, or deliver, with knowledge or fraudulent intent, a check for which there are insufficient funds on deposit, or without reasonable grounds for believing that it will be paid, or to obtain money or property by means of a worthless, false, or bogus check, or to pass fictitious checks or drafts.

The effect of specific statutes in a number of jurisdictions is to make it a crime to draw, utter, pass, or deliver, with intent to defraud, or at least knowingly and purposely, a check or draft on a bank, where the drawer has not sufficient funds on deposit, or credit with the bank, to meet the check or draft,⁵⁴

Purpose of statute

(1) The statute is specifically aimed at discouraging the giving of bad checks for what purports to be a cash purchase when the drawer has, instead of the present means, only a vague intention to make the check good at some future time.
Va.—Cook v. Commonwealth, 16 S. E.2d 635, 178 Va. 251.

(2) The statute was enacted in furtherance of public policy to punish a special sort of commercial fraud, whether it be committed in an individual or official capacity.
Del.—Clifton v. State, 145 A.2d 392.

(3) The purpose is to facilitate commerce and banking by averting the inconvenience and expense of handling worthless checks through banking channels, and by averting difficulty of collecting bills from those who give worthless checks, as well as to reduce hazard of loss of merchandise obtained by such checks.
Md.—Kaufman v. State, 85 A.2d 446, 199 Md. 35.

(4) Purpose of statute is to discourage overdrafts and resulting bad banking, to stop practice of "check-kiting," and to avert mischief to trade, commerce, and banking caused by circulation of worthless checks.
Kan.—Application of Windle, 294 P. 2d 213, 179 Kan. 239.

(5) The nuisance to trade and commerce of worthless checks condemned by statute is the giving of a worthless check and its consequent disturbance of business integrity.
N.C.—State v. Jackson, 90 S.E.2d 507, 243 N.C. 216—State v. White, 53 S.E.2d 436, 230 N.C. 513.

Ky.—Hughes v. Commonwealth, 22 S.W.2d 618, 232 Ky. 232.
Pa.—Commonwealth v. Rush & Harnett, 78 Pa.Super. 404.

Limited application of statute

Fraudulent Check Act concerns cases where there is in fact a maker or drawer of instrument, and it is limited to cases where accused knew at time of making, drawing, uttering, or delivering, that maker or drawer of check, draft, or order did not have sufficient funds in, or credit with, bank, depository, person, firm, or corporation for payment thereof in full on its presentation.

Ind.—Hazelgrove v. State, 145 N.E. 2d 13, certiorari denied 78 S.Ct. 1141, 356 U.S. 977, 2 L.Ed.2d 1150.

Distinction from forgery

(1) The statute denouncing forgery denounces an entirely different crime from the statute denouncing the drawing of a check with knowledge of the insufficiency of funds.

Ky.—White v. Commonwealth, 244 S. W. 54, 196 Ky. 64—Siegel v. Commonwealth, 197 S.W. 467, 176 Ky. 772.

(2) Hence the latter statute is not invalid as defining the same offense as the first but providing a different penalty.

Ky.—Siegel v. Commonwealth, supra.

"Funds" and "credit" distinguished

While abstractly the word "funds" is of broad significance, within the meaning of the statute requiring an insufficiency of funds or credit, it means money, and is not synonymous with "credit."

Del.—State v. Vandenburg, 193 A. 701, 9 W.W.Harr. 320.

Meaning of "utter"

(1) The word "utter," as used in the statute means to declare or assert directly or indirectly by words or actions that a thing offered is genuine or good; to make use of, to offer, to pass off, or to put in circulation, and usually, merely to offer a check to a person is to "utter" it, whether it be accepted by that person or not.

Del.—State v. Vandenburg, 2 A.2d 916, 9 W.W.Harr. 498.

(2) The word "utter" means to put in circulation as money or currency, to cause to pass in trade, and "utterance" means putting in circulation, as false coin or forged notes.

Cal.—People v. Descant, 124 P.2d 864, 867, 51 C.A.2d 343.

Nonexistence of funds or credit is an essential element of the crime of giving a false or bogus check with intent to defraud.

Okl.—Kilgore v. State, 219 P. 160, 25 Okl.Cr. 69.

Instruments included

(1) A check drawn to cash or bearer.
Cal.—People v. Freeman, 156 P. 994, 29 C.A. 543.

(2) A check payable to the maker's order, although given to a third party without endorsement.

Cal.—People v. Wilbur, 165 P. 729, 33 C.A. 511.

(3) In view of the fact that the statute covers both checks and drafts, where defendant wrote "draft" on one corner of check drawn on bank and purported to insert name of certain person in space designated for branch of bank, he could not avoid criminal responsibility for issuing a worthless check on theory that instrument was a draft and had not been presented to drawee when there appeared to be no person or branch of bank bearing the inserted name.
Cal.—People v. Silverman, 92 P.2d 507, 33 C.A.2d 1.

Check drawn by another

(1) One who, by indorsement or otherwise, with intent to defraud, uses check or draft, knowing at time that maker or drawer has not sufficient funds on deposit to pay same when presented, is guilty of the offense.

Ky.—Siegel v. Commonwealth, 197 S. W. 809, 177 Ky. 232—Siegel v. Commonwealth, 197 S.W. 467, 176 Ky. 772.

(2) However, an indorser of a check drawn upon a bank to be criminally responsible must be shown to have been criminally connected with the proposition to defraud.

Tex.—Dawson v. State, 185 S.W. 875, 79 Tex.Cr. 371.

(3) Where accused made no representations, but merely presented a valid negotiable instrument in due course duly indorsed by the payee who received the money for which the instrument called, and its non-payment was in consequence of the subsequent act of the drawer, who stopped payment of the check at the bank on which it was drawn, accused was not guilty of obtaining money on false pretenses.

Ala.—Whately v. State, 31 So.2d 664, 249 Ala. 355, 174 A.L.R. 169.

(4) Where accused persons did not execute or deliver, or authorize the execution and delivery, of the check, their ratification of the wrong and their attempts to procure funds for payment of the check could not render them guilty.

Pa.—Commonwealth v. Rush & Harnett, 78 Pa.Super. 404.

Location of drawee bank

(1) The term "any bank," as used in statute defining offense of issupaid.⁵⁵ The offense is one against the public,^{55,5} and consists not in presently obtaining something of value by deceit, but in putting into circulation worthless commercial paper which will ultimately result in financial loss.^{55,10} Within such a statute, a check may be a completed check notwithstanding the name of the payee is in blank.^{55,15} The making, uttering, issuing, and delivering of a worthless check constitute a crime regardless of the consent of anyone,^{55,20} each act being a separate offense.^{55,25}

In some jurisdictions, statutes make it a crime to obtain money or property by means of a worthless, false, or bogus check,⁵⁶ the word "false," in such a ing a check on any bank without sufficient funds or credit, includes any bank whether located within or without the state, and is not limited to a bank located within the state. Idaho.—State v. Campbell, 219 P.2d 956, 70 Idaho 408.

(2) Under former Arkansas statute, the check was required to be drawn on a bank within the state, and one who, while outside the state, drew a check on a foreign bank and mailed it into the state was not guilty, even though the check was deposited for collection with a local bank.

Ark.—Cousins v. State, 151 S.W.2d 658, 202 Ark. 500.

(3) By Act 232 of the Acts of 1943, the law was amended to cover checks or drafts drawn on banks or other institutions outside the state. Ark.—Mortensen v. State, 217 S.W. 2d 325, 214 Ark. 528.

Establishing validity of check

In prosecution for issuing check without sufficient funds, validity of check given for automobile was sufficiently established, where defendant received possession of car, notwithstanding failure to deliver bill of sale.

Ohio.—Gutridge v. State, 173 N.E. 447, 37 Ohio App. 1, error dismissed 174 N.E. 140, 122 Ohio St. 623.

Draft on nonbanking institution

Drawing of check on institution which is not depository of money, such as packing company, when drawer has no funds or credit there to meet check, is not violation of worthless check act.

Kan.—State v. Williams, 42 P.2d 561, 141 Kan. 732.

7 C.J. p 675 note 8.

Essential element

It is essential to prove that one drawing a check on a bank not only had no funds in the bank, but also that he had no good reason to believe that the check would be paid.

Fla.—Whitney v. State, 58 So. 230, 63 Fla. 53.

Tex.—Pruitt v. State, 202 S.W. 81, 83 Tex.Cr. 148.

Expectation of meeting check

(1) A reasonable expectation that the check will be paid when presented, based on the intention of depositing sufficient funds before presentation, has been held sufficient to exonerate defendant.

Cal.—People v. Griffith, 262 P.2d 355, 120 C.A.2d 873—People v. Becker, 30 P.2d 562, 137 C.A. 349.

Ohio.—State v. Stemen, 106 N.E.2d 662, 90 Ohio App. 309.

(2) There is a contrary dictum in People v. King, 219 P. 753, 63 C.A. 674.

(3) The crime of obtaining money through false pretenses is not committed, even though a check is drawn on an account by one who knows that he has no funds to his credit with which to pay it, provided he has the honest and reasonable expectation that the check or draft will be paid on presentation.

Ark.—Mortensen v. State, 217 S.W. 2d 325, 214 Ark. 528.

Actual deposit of sufficient funds to meet the check before its presentation exonerates defendant.

Offer of repayment before time for presentment

Where defendant issued a check knowing there were no funds in the bank to meet it, and because of intervening holidays the check could not be presented for payment for several days, so that he could have deposited funds on the first banking day thereafter to meet the check, but instead of doing so he offered to repay the amount of the check the day after it was issued, a violation of the bad-check law was not shown to have been committed.

Tex.—Arrington v. State, 296 S.W. 568, 107 Tex.Cr. 422.

55.5 N.C.—State v. Levy, 18 S.E.2d 355, 220 N.C. 812—State v. Yarboro, 140 S.E. 216, 194 N.C. 498.

Agreement not to deposit

If worthless checks were issued by accused, fact that he had an agreement with payee's agent not to deposit them "until the following Saturday" would not exculpate him from having issued checks knowing at the time that he did not have sufficient funds on deposit in, or credit with, drawee bank with which to pay checks on presentation.

Purpose of the bad check law and its successive amendments is to discourage the giving of bad checks for what purport to be cash purchases.

Gravamen or gist of offense

(1) "The gravamen of the charge . . . is not the issuance of a check, but is the obtaining, with fraudulent intent, money or other property or credit by means of a check. The 'bad check' is merely the prohibited means of accomplishing the fraud."

Tenn.—Malkemus v. State, 129 S.W. 2d 201, 174 Tenn. 547—State v.

statute, denoting intentional, deliberate, and willful untruth, something beyond mere inaccuracy,^{56.5} and "bogus check" meaning a check drawn on a nonexistent bank or by, or payable to, a fictitious person.^{56.10} It is not necessary that the check or draft used to obtain possession of money or merchandise be complete in form in order to constitute a crime.^{56.15}

The giving of a check without sufficient funds in order to obtain property, and the giving of such a check in payment of an obligation have been held, under statute, distinct offenses.^{56.20}

Under some statutes it is a crime to pass fictitious checks or drafts.⁵⁷

(2) Elements of Offense

Under the bad-check statutes, intent to defraud and knowledge of the insufficiency of funds at the time the check is issued are generally essential elements of the offense. Under some statutes, it is immaterial whether payment or restitution is subsequently made; under oth-

Cooley, 206 S.W. 182, 183, 141 Tenn. 33.

(2) The gravamen of the offense of unlawfully obtaining money or property by any false or bogus check is not so much by what means the victim was filched, but the intent of the perpetrator in effecting his objective, the essence of the offense being the plan and purpose of perpetrator to swindle another of his money or property.

Colo.—McBride v. People, 248 P.2d 725, 126 Colo. 277.

(3) The gist of the crime is obtaining with fraudulent intent money, property, or a valuable thing by means or use of a bogus check.

Okl.—Simpson v. State, Cr., 267 P. 2d 1008.

No single definition can cover the range of possibilities of the offense of unlawfully obtaining money by means of false or bogus checks, but each case depends on its peculiar circumstances.

Colo.—McBride v. People, 248 P.2d 725, 126 Colo. 277.

Offenses distinguished

(1) "Obtaining goods by means of worthless check" and "uttering worthless check, with knowledge of worthlessness," are not synonymous offenses.

N.C.—State v. Martin, 155 S.E. 447, 199 N.C. 636.

(2) Under statute punishing the issuing of a fraudulent check, the giving of a check without sufficient funds in payment of an obligation, and the giving of such a check to obtain property, are distinct offenses.

Ind.—Tullis v. State, 103 N.E.2d 353, 230 Ind. 311.

(3) Where provision which made it a felony to obtain money or property by use of check drawn on bank in which drawer knew he had no funds was added to statute which made it a felony to obtain money by means of false or bogus check, the legislature distinguished a genuine check drawn on a bank in which the drawer knew he had no funds from a check drawn on a nonexistent bank or by or payable to a fictitious person.

Mo.—State v. Bird, 242 S.W.2d 576.

Instruments included

(1) The word "check," within statute, includes any instrument similar to bank check or draft in nature of commercial paper, such as express company money order.

Ill.—People v. Sceri, 95 N.E.2d 80, 407 Ill. 90.

(2) An instrument designed to simulate a check but to have effect of a note, with "will" inserted in small print before "pay to the order" and "payable at" inserted above name of bank, was nevertheless a "check" within purview of statutes penalizing false uttering of bank check.

Iowa.—State v. Doudna, 284 N.W. 113, 226 Iowa 351.

Obtaining money by check without funds constituted obtaining of money or property on "false or bogus check."

Okl.—Gunther v. State, 276 P. 237, 42 Okl.Cr. 129, followed in 276 P. 239, 42 Okl.Cr. 320.

Two checks as single transaction

Tenn.—Williams v. State, 281 S.W.2d 41, 198 Tenn. 439.

Facts also showing forgery

Conviction under bogus check statute for obtaining money by means of false or bogus check would not be reversed on ground that check was forged rather than bogus, since prosecution may be had under such statute either for altered or forged check.

Okl.—Loughridge v. State, 72 P.2d 513, 63 Okl.Cr. 33.

56.5 Colo.—McBride v. People, 248 P.2d 725, 126 Colo. 277.

56.10 Mo.—State v. Robinson, 255 S. W.2d 811.

Check drawn without funds

A check given by a person on a bank in which he has no funds and which he has no reason to suppose will be honored is "bogus" within statute making it unlawful to obtain money or property by use of any false or bogus check.

Colo.—McBride v. People, 248 P.2d 725, 126 Colo. 277.

Insufficient funds statute not applicable

Where defendant had a checking account in bank under one name and wrote a check in excess of such account in another name, and there was no arrangement with bank to pay check signed in such other name out of her account, check was false and bogus and prosecution was properly brought under statute prohibiting obtaining of money by means of a false and bogus check issued with intent to defraud and not under statute dealing with checks drawn on insufficient funds with intent to defraud.

Essence of offense of passing fictitious check with intent to defraud is the passing, with intent to defraud, to another of fictitious check purporting to be check for payment of money of nonexistent individual, knowing check to be fictitious.

Mere nonexistence of drawee of draft does not make it a fictitious or bogus draft.

Prosecution as forgery

In view of the amendment of the forgery statute to include the signing of the name of a fictitious person, the making and passing of a fictitious instrument may be prosecuted either under the forgery statute or the statute relating to the uttering of fictitious instruments.

ers, the drawer has a prescribed time within which to pay and thereby escape being held guilty of the offense.

Although certain distinctions have been indicated,⁵⁸ the crimes denounced by worthless-check statutes are generally regarded as more or less akin to the broader offense of obtaining money or property by false pretenses,⁵⁹ and the elements are to a certain extent the same.⁶⁰ Thus, an intent to defraud is generally held to be an essential element of the offense under such statute;⁶¹ so, too, are knowledge by accused of the insufficiency of the funds or lack of credit,⁶² willfulness on his part,^{62.5} and the securing of money, credit, or other thing of value.^{62.10}

If the payee or holder of the check has knowledge,

Intent independently of success

The intent of the person who issues a check without sufficient funds cannot be made to depend on the success of his enterprise for which he seeks to obtain the money represented by the check.

Personal knowledge is equivalent to express notice within proviso that statute making it offense to draw check without sufficient funds does not apply, where payee has been expressly notified of such fact prior to drawing of check; hence if payee agreed, as by implication, to accept checks, knowing they might not then be good and to extend credit until paid on redeposit, drawer's act in giving checks without sufficient funds on deposit did not constitute offense.

U.S.—Seaboard Oil Co. v. Cunningham, C.C.A.Fla., 51 F.2d 321, certiorari denied 52 S.Ct. 35, 284 U.S. 657, 76 L.Ed. 557.

Knowledge of corrupt agent

Where defendant bribed employees of a bank to cash worthless checks drawn by defendant on other banks, the knowledge of such employees was not knowledge of the defrauded bank so as to relieve defendant of liability.

Cal.—People v. Zimmer, 73 P.2d 923, 23 C.A.2d 581.

Request or agreement to defer presentment

(1) Several authorities have held that where the parties agree at the time the check is issued that it shall not be presented for payment until a later day, and the fair implication is that there are not sufficient funds

ing, the transaction being in its essential nature an extension of credit to the drawer.^{63.5}

In at least one jurisdiction, however, the offense of issuing a check with knowledge of the insufficiency of funds is held to be unrelated to the false-pretense, false-token, or bogus-check group of crimes,⁶⁴ so that an intent to defraud,⁶⁵ or the accomplishment of the fraud,^{65.5} is not an element of the offense, and the knowledge of the person to whom the check is issued of the insufficiency of the funds is immaterial.⁶⁶

Under most authorities, to constitute the crime, the insufficiency of the funds must exist at the time the check is issued.⁶⁷ If there were sufficient funds on deposit at that time, the offense is not committed, even though by subsequent changes the funds were rendered insufficient;⁶⁹ but this is not true where the drawer knows that other checks which he has drawn, but which have not yet cleared, will deplete the fund before the check in question can be presented.⁷⁰ It has also been held that the sufficiency of funds or credit is determinable at the time of presentment of the check for payment.^{70.5} If accused had credit with the bank, or an arrangement or understanding with it that the check would be paid despite the insufficiency of the funds on deposit, the offense is not committed.⁷¹

Under a number of worthless-check statutes, the crime is complete, if it has been committed at all, when the making, delivery, or uttering of the check takes place,⁷² and it is immaterial whether payment at the time of presentation, the offense is not committed.

Tex.—Lloyd v. State, 266 S.W. 785, 98 Tex.Cr. 504.

(2) However, it has been held that the giving of a check with a request to withhold presentment may, under certain circumstances, constitute a false pretense under the general false pretense statute.

W.Va.—State v. Augustine, 171 S.E. 111, 114 W.Va. 143.

(3) In North Carolina, an agreement to withhold depositing the check until a later date does not exculpate the drawer.

(4) Earlier authority was to the contrary effect.

N.C.—State v. Tatum, 172 S.E. 405, 205 N.C. 784.

Giving of undated check in settlement of running account and for additional goods, date to be inserted on presentation because of insufficient funds to cover when given, and presentment at different times and non-payment, was insufficient to justify conviction for intent to defraud, where maker had at different times after delivery of check sufficient money on deposit to cover.

Wis.—Merkel v. State, 167 N.W. 802,

Underlying principle

The so-called "cold check law" is based on the principle that the drawing or uttering of a check is an implied representation that the drawer has present funds on deposit to meet it, and by its provisions if such funds are not present, and this is done with the intent to defraud, a crime is committed.

Ky.—Commonwealth v. Bandy, 165 S.
W.2d 337, 291 Ky. 721.

Presentation to bank unnecessary

Actual presentation of no-fund check by payee to bank was unnecessary in order to make the one who executed the check chargeable with issuing a no-fund check.

Purpose and intent

(1) Such a provision is a declaration that payment is evidence of a lack of fraudulent intent.

W.Va.—State v. Price, 97 S.E. 582, 83
W.Va. 71, 5 A.L.R. 1247.

(2) It is not intended to destroy or weaken the public policy against the use of criminal processes for collecting debts.

What constitutes payment

(1) Accord and satisfaction for the purpose of payment amounts to payment.

W.Va.—State v. Cunningham, 111 S.
E. 835, 90 W.Va. 806.

(2) Since defendant may avoid conviction by paying the check after dishonor, he may do so by depositing sufficient funds before presentment, and where he makes such a deposit, but the bank diverts the funds to another purpose, defendant is not guilty.

W.Va.—State v. Price, 97 S.E. 582,
83 W.Va. 71, 5 A.L.R. 1247.

(3) A partial belated payment of fifteen dollars on worthless check for two hundred dollars does not render accused immune to criminal prosecution.

Kan.—Ex parte Myers, 237 P. 1026,
119 Kan. 270.

(4) Discharge in bankruptcy of offender is equivalent of payment of civil liability to payee, and may be pleaded as payment, whereby he may procure abatement of criminal prosecution and discharge.

Kan.—Ex parte Myers, supra.

(5) However, a settlement on a credit basis has been held insufficient to exculpate accused, cash payment being required.

N.J.—State v. Parsons, 140 A. 13, 6
N.J.Misc. 76, affirmed 142 A. 918,

Time for presentment and protest

(1) Protest within a reasonable time is ordinarily required.

322, 103 W.Va. 594—State v. Cunningham, 111 S.E. 835, 90 W.Va.
806.

(2) However, it has been held that failure of payee to present check within a reasonable time will not affect the liability of the drawer where the drawer loses nothing by reason of failure to present the check earlier.

W.Va.—State v. Price, 97 S.E. 582, 83
W.Va. 71, 5 A.L.R. 1247.

Aider and abettor

One prosecuted for counseling, aiding, or abetting commission of offense denounced by the worthless check law may procure abatement of the prosecution in the same manner as though he were principal.

116 Kan. 390.

not protect accused from arrest prior to the expiration of such period.⁷⁵ A provision that failure to make good within a stated period after receipt of notice of dishonor shall be prima facie evidence of certain elements of the crime has been held to be merely a rule of evidence and not to make such failure an element of the offense.⁷⁶

A criminal prosecution under a bad-check statute is not a substitute for an accounting of a joint venture.^{76.5}

c. Present or Past Consideration; Past Indebtedness

Under some statutes the giving of a worthless check for a past indebtedness is not an offense; but this is not true under other bad-check statutes.

Under some statutes denouncing the obtaining of money or property by false pretense or token, the mere uttering or passing of a worthless check in payment of a past indebtedness does not constitute such crime.⁷⁷ This has also been held true under a statute denouncing the giving of a worthless check with intent to defraud,⁷⁸ because in the absence of simultaneously obtaining money or property there is no intent to defraud;^{78.5} while the giving of a worthless check for past consideration does not ipso facto negative the element of fraud, it is a controlling circumstance where no other element of fraud exists.^{78.10} On the other hand, if the intent to defraud exists, the crime is committed even though the check is given for past consideration.^{78.15}

Under other statutes denouncing the uttering or passing of worthless checks, the obtaining of a present financial consideration is not an ingredient of the crime, the crime being committed even where the check is given for a past-due debt.⁷⁹

Proceedings for abatement of prosecution

Under a statute so providing, defendant is entitled to an abatement of the prosecution on a showing that he had an account at the bank within a stated period prior to the issuance of the check, and that the check was issued without intent to defraud, and if the court finds the facts to be so, defendant is entitled to be discharged on payment into court of the amount of the check and costs. On application for such abatement, the judge has full jurisdiction to hear evidence and determine therefrom existence or nonexistence of the material facts, and the burden is on defendant to establish such facts; and the trial judge may consider all the circumstances and form an opinion respecting the credibility of witnesses, and he and the reviewing court are not obligated to believe defendant's testimony, although it is not positively contradicted.

Concurrence in time

The offense of issuing worthless checks in exchange for anything of value with intent to defraud is committed only when there is a concurrence in point of time of an intent to defraud, the receipt of title and possession of a thing of value, and the giving of the worthless check in payment therefor, and it does not include the giving of a check for an antecedent debt.

d. Postdated Check

The authorities differ as to whether the fact that a check is postdated relieves accused of criminal liability.

Some authorities hold that the fact that a worthless check is postdated does not protect accused,⁸⁰ even if the payee has actual knowledge that there are not sufficient funds on deposit at the time of issuance.⁸¹

Other authorities hold that the crime is not made out where the payee knows that there are not sufficient funds, but takes the check in reliance on the drawer's promise that there will be sufficient funds on the date of the check,⁸² or where the maker calls to the attention of the payee that the check is postdated or makes with him an arrangement to hold it.^{82.5} A number of authorities go even further, and, on the theory that postdating a check implies the present insufficiency of funds, hold that in any such case the offense is not committed,⁸³ unless such circumstances or additional representations are involved as to negative the implication of insufficiency,⁸⁴ or hold that a postdated check, being

Legislative purpose in enacting bogus-check statute should not be defeated by an interpretation which would permit one bent on fraud to protect himself by using a postdate on the check, and if other requirements of statute are met, one who criminally defrauds with a postdated check should be held as responsible as one who knowingly passes a bad check with a current date.

Sufficiency of funds when drawn

Where the drawer had sufficient funds when he drew a postdated check, and payee changed the date and presented the check before the original date, the drawer having meanwhile withdrawn part of the funds so that the balance was insufficient, the drawer could not, before the date originally appearing on the check, be held for fraudulently issuing a worthless check.

Check no more than note

(1) Where payee takes a postdated check with full knowledge that it is postdated, and it is not represented by the maker as being good at time given, and there is merely a representation that money will be deposited in bank at some future date, the check is no more than a note, and is not a representation on which a charge of false pretense can be successfully based.

(2) Where seller had accepted buyer's postdated check for goods sold and seller applied subsequent part payments as credit on check, check was given as promissory note to be paid on a future date and therefore, buyer had not issued a cold and worthless check within meaning of statute, and cold-check statute does not apply to drawer of note who fails to make payment at maturity. merely an obligation in the future, is not a violation of the statute.^{84.5} However, a check not dated is not equivalent to a postdated check.^{84.10}

The question whether an accused is guilty of an offense when he stops payment on a check depends on the sufficiency of funds or credit in the bank at the time the instrument is made or uttered.

It has been held that stopping payment on a check does not alter the offense of making, uttering, or delivering a check with intent to defraud and without sufficient funds in the bank on which it is drawn.⁸⁵ On the other hand, where defendant stops payment on a good check, the crime of obtaining money or property by false pretenses cannot be made out on the theory that the undisclosed intention to stop payment constituted a false pretense;⁸⁶ nor does stopping payment of a good check given for a past-due debt constitute the offense of swindling by obtaining money or property through the use of a worthless check,⁸⁷ or the offense of withdrawing deposits with intent to defeat payment of a check.⁸⁸

One stopping payment on a check after obtaining a benefit thereunder and with intent to defraud may be guilty of cheating and swindling, but is not guilty of uttering a bad check.^{88.5}

However, where instructions were given to the bank before the check was issued to refuse payment of any check made out in the manner of the one given the prosecutor, the effect is the same as if defendant had not sufficient credit with the bank, even though actually there were sufficient funds on deposit.⁸⁹

§ 22. Effectiveness of Pretense; Reliance Thereon

To create an offense, it is not sufficient that there is a false pretense; the pretense must be an effective cause in inducing the owner to part with his property, although it need not be the sole inducing cause. It must have been made before the property was obtained.

A false pretense is not penal until the crime is completed by the prosecutor being led into believing it;^{89.50} but it is not necessary that the person defrauded should have exercised diligence,^{89.55} or made any investigation which would have showed him the true state of the case, as discussed supra § 15.

To create an offense, it is not sufficient that there is a false pretense; the owner of the property must rely on it, and it must be an effective or moving cause in inducing him to part with his property,⁹⁰

Check dated next day

Where check issued after banking hours was dated the next day, and maker gave the reason that it was too late to cash it on that day, the fact that check was postdated did not bar prosecution for false uttering of bank check.

Opportunity to investigate; withdrawal of representations

One accused of false pretenses cannot escape conviction on the ground that his victim was given an opportunity to make an investigation which would have disclosed the fraud, and was told by the former not to rely on his representations, unless it further appears that the victim accepted the withdrawal of

tion of the representations made by accused, to ascertain their truth, yet if he nevertheless would not have parted with the goods but for such representations, believing them true, accused is guilty.⁹⁴

Where the false representation is as to a matter of law, it has been held that the person to whom it was made must have known that it was false and so could not have been induced by it to have parted with his property.⁹⁵

A corporation may be held to have actual knowledge of the alleged false pretense where its agent has knowledge;^{95.5} but knowledge of an agent of the owner of the falsity of the pretense will not be imputed to the owner where accused and the agent conspired to defraud by false pretense;⁹⁶ and the same rule applies where accused, with the collusion of a public official, obtains public funds by false pretense.⁹⁷

Pretense after property obtained. For the reason that the pretense must be effective cause in inducing the owner to part with his property, there can be no conviction based on a pretense made after the property was obtained.⁹⁸

Other inducements operating. Although the pretense must be an inducing cause of the owner's parting with his property, it need not be the sole inducing cause; it is sufficient if it had a material influence in inducing the owner to part with his property, although he was also influenced in part by other causes.⁹⁹

Remoteness of pretense. In a number of cases it has been held that, although false pretenses were made and property obtained, the pretenses were too remote from the obtaining of the property to sustain an indictment,¹ as, for instance, where a contract has been entered into under false representations and property obtained under the contract.² It has been said, however, that, if a causal relation exists between the contract and the false pretense, the fact that the property was obtained immediately through the contract to which the false pretenses induced the prosecutor to consent is no defense.³

It would seem that if the false pretense is the operative cause of the transfer of the property, and if there is a casual relation between the pretense and the transfer which directly causes the transfer, the remoteness of the pretense is immaterial.⁴

Continuing pretense; lapse of time. A number of cases have based the criminal liability of accused on the doctrine of continuing pretenses, under which, if the pretense is the inducing cause, it is immaterial that there has been a lapse of time between the pretense and the obtaining of the property;⁵ and the representations will be treated as continuing so as to cover any money, property, or services received as a result thereof.^{5.5}

Merger of prior negotiations into contract. The rule applicable in civil cases that all prior negotiations are merged into a subsequent contract in writing is not applicable in a prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses involving the issue whether certain false representations were made, were relied on, and resulted in money loss.^{5.10}

§ 23. Knowledge of Accused of Falsity of Pretense and of Reliance Thereon

To constitute the crime of false pretenses, there must be knowledge on the part of accused of the falsity of his pretense and knowledge, or reason to believe, that his representations are relied on as the ground of credit.

Since there can be no intent to obtain property by means of a false pretense unless accused knows the pretense to be untrue, such knowledge on his part is essential to the commission of the crime;⁶ so, if accused believes in the truth of the representation made, although it is untrue, the offense is not committed.⁷ However, making a statement recklessly and without information justifying a belief in its truth has been held tantamount to the utterance of a statement knowing it to be false;⁸ but there

Accused chargeable with knowledge

In prosecution of cashier and general manager for sale of stock in failing bank by false pretenses, accused was chargeable with knowledge of conditions obvious in records of bank and responsible for representations made with intent to deceive and defraud purchaser, regardless of whether he knew of conditions disclosed by records.

is authority to the contrary,⁹ particularly where the statute requires the false statement to have been "designedly" made.¹⁰

There can be no conviction under the statute against obtaining goods by false pretenses unless accused knows, or has reason to believe, that his representations are relied on as the ground of credit.¹¹

§ 24. Obtaining of Property

The false pretense having been made, the offense is complete when, and only when, property is obtained as a result of it; title as well as possession must pass, although the title may be only voidable.

"Obtain" defined

(1) "Obtain" means not to acquire the mere possession of property, but to acquire the title thereto or the ownership thereof."

absolute title, a voidable title being sufficient in all cases.¹⁶

When accused is in possession of the property at the time, the intent to invest title in him will be sufficient;¹⁷ but when he is not already in possession he must, in addition to acquiring title, obtain actual possession of the property, either in person or by his agent.¹⁸ It follows that to complete the offense both title to, and possession of, the property must have been obtained,¹⁹ and where accused does not obtain title to the property he is not guilty of the offense.^{19.5}

Transfer for limited time or purpose. Generally, where property is parted with for only a limited time or for a special purpose the offense is not committed;²⁰ however, as appears supra § 3, obtaining a loan of money is a sufficient obtaining to constitute the offense, where the lender does not expect the return of the identical money lent.

From whom obtained; necessity of ownership. To constitute the offense, the money or property obtained need not belong to the person defrauded.^{20.5} Thus, actual ownership of the money or goods by the person on whom the fraud is practiced is not essential; it is sufficient if he had lawful possession and dominion thereof.²¹

Where accused solicits money from a person who directs another to deliver the former's money to accused, the money is deemed to have been obtained from the first person.²² A partner cannot be guilty of obtaining money by false pretenses where the money belonged to the partnership,²³ but obtaining money from one with whom accused has entered in-

Reason for rule

The doctrine that one must obtain title and possession in order to be guilty of the crime of false pretenses cannot mean an absolute title, because any title obtained by fraud is voidable and such requirement would make it impossible for the crime to be consummated.

Interest obtained under conditional sale

(1) Where the buyer of an automobile, sold under a conditional sales contract, was put in possession thereof on delivery of a worthless check as down payment, and the legal title was retained by seller merely for purposes of security, the property interest obtained by buyer was sufficient to support a conviction for obtaining money by false pretenses.

Wis.—Whitmore v. State, supra.

(2) In determining whether accused committed offense, fact, if true that chattel mortgage to two television sets, which were purchased after he made misrepresentation as to indebtedness on automobile given as security for the purchase, would have to be construed as conditional sales contract, which would preclude accused from having received title to them, was irrelevant.

to an executory agreement to form a partnership is not within this principle.²⁴

§ 25. — By and for Whom Obtained

To convict of the offense, it is necessary that the property should have been obtained by or for the accused; but it may be obtained by another on his account, or for another's benefit.

To convict of obtaining property by false pretenses, it is necessary that the property obtained, or some part thereof, should have been obtained by or for accused.²⁵ The property need not be delivered to accused himself; it is sufficient if it is obtained by another on his account.²⁶ Further, the property need not be obtained by accused for himself, it being sufficient if, as a result of his false representations, it is delivered either for the benefit of accused or for another's benefit.²⁷

Money is not obtained by accused where the prosecuting witness pays it to a partnership of which he and accused are partners.²⁸

§ 26. — Property Obtained in General

The property obtained must generally be a thing of value, or something the deprivation of which may cause the owner a loss; according to some authorities the thing must have a physical attribute and be more than a mere pecuniary advantage. Whether particular things are within the statute depends on the language thereof; real property is usually, but not always, excluded.

The property included in the first English statute as to false pretenses was limited to "money, goods, wares or merchandise."²⁹ In later statutes, chattels, valuable securities, and choses in action were included.³⁰ Many of the American statutes have transcribed the enumeration contained in the first English statute;³¹ but a number have added to this enumeration other kinds of property, such as valuable securities, credit, chattels or property generally, or have, after particularizing certain kinds of property added, "other thing of value," "other effects," "other property," or similar general words or terms.³² It may be stated, as a general rule, that the property obtained must be such that the owner's deprivation of it may, by possibility at least, be a cause of loss to him.³³ The property must be a thing of value;³⁴ it has been held that it must be such a thing as is, or may be, the subject of larceny,³⁵ and that obtaining a mere pecuniary advantage is not sufficient, since the thing obtained must have a physical attribute.³⁶

The term "property" has been held, in this connection, to mean worldly goods or possessions, tangible things, and things which have exchangeable or commercial value;³⁷ it must be something capable of being possessed and title to which can be transferred.^{37.5} It includes promissory notes binding on the maker,³⁸ checks,³⁹ drafts,⁴⁰ stock certificates,⁴¹ and generally all commercial paper.⁴² In confidence-game statutes the term is used in its broadest sense and includes any property other than money.⁴³

On the other hand, as the term is ordinarily used in false pretense or kindred statutes, it does not include credit⁴⁴ or the obtaining of an indorsement or credit on a note,⁴⁵ the oral guaranty of an indebtedness,^{45.5} the renewal of a note,⁴⁶ patronage,⁴⁷ board and lodging,⁴⁸ or services rendered.⁴⁹ In several jurisdictions, however, as appears in Innkeepers § 28, the obtaining of board and lodging in hotels or boarding houses by false representations or tricks is an indictable offense.

Moreover, the categories of intangible personal property set out in a civil statute cannot be imported into a criminal statute for the purpose of expanding the word "property" beyond its established meaning when used in connection with the crime of false pretenses.^{49.5}

The term "money," as used in false pretense statutes, has been held to have its ordinary meaning, namely, the medium of exchange recognized by the law of the country,⁵⁰ and every deposit which any person owning it is entitled to withdraw in money on demand.⁵¹ It has been held not to include promissory notes,⁵² certificates of deposit,⁵³ checks,⁵⁴ drafts,⁵⁵ orders to pay money,⁵⁶ credit,⁵⁷ the extension of credit on a note,⁵⁸ the extension of indebtedness,⁵⁹ or the extension of time for the payment of money;⁶⁰ but under some statutes it is an offense to procure credit or extension of credit by false statements.⁶¹ It has been held that the term "money," as used in the statutes, does not include bank notes,⁶² but there is authority to the contrary.⁶³

The term "other valuable thing" has been held to include everything of value,⁶⁴ provided it has a physical attribute and is not merely a pecuniary advantage.⁶⁵ The term does not qualify the words "money, goods or property," but enlarges the class of personal things which it is made penal to obtain;⁶⁶ nevertheless, under the doctrine of ejusdem generis, the additional things embraced by the term must be of the same general kind and class as the specific things enumerated.⁶⁷

The term includes a promissory note,⁶⁸ whether the maker is solvent or insolvent,⁶⁹ a check representing funds in bank,⁷⁰ indorsement of a check by which the indorser is rendered liable,⁷¹ and the signature of a person to a note whereby he becomes a surety, although the note and the paper on which it is written are the property of accused.⁷² Likewise, it includes the obtaining of lodgings,⁷³ and, it has been held, professional services,⁷⁴ although there is authority to the contrary.⁷⁵ It does not include a receipt for a debt,⁷⁶ the settlement of an account,⁷⁷ an unenforceable contract,⁷⁸ credit,⁷⁹ or an extension of time for paying a debt.⁸⁰

The term "or thing of value," as used in a false pretense statute, following the words "money, bond, bill, receipt, promissory note, draft, or check," has been held to have an unquestioned and unchallenged meaning, not limited by the rule of ejusdem generis to like things of value.^{80.5} Under another statute, the extension of time for the repayment of an existing loan, even for only a day or an hour, would constitute a thing of value;^{80.10} and under a statute making it unlawful for any person to obtain a thing of value by giving or drawing a check, draft, or order if such person does not have sufficient funds, a deposit slip evidencing a credit to his account received by defendant after presentation of a check to the bank was held a thing of value.^{80.15}

The term "valuable right" embraces the securing of the signature of a person to a note which he was subsequently required to pay,⁸¹ and the obtaining of a certified copy of a petition and citation from the court clerk;⁸² but a chance in a raffle is not included.⁸³

Real property. As appears supra in § 4, at common law the offense of cheating did not apply to a fraudulent transaction whereby the owner of land was deprived of it; and statutes as to false pretenses do not usually apply to real property,⁸⁴ but may operate on the deed itself.^{84.5} On the other hand, some statutes are broad enough to include real property or any interest therein.⁸⁵

Other matters subject of offense. Within the term "other effects" are a promissory note⁸⁶ and a bill of exchange.⁸⁷

Under the term "thing in action" is included the certification of a check.⁸⁸ "Chattels" includes a letter.⁸⁹

The word "whatsoever," in the phrase "any money or property whatsoever," in a statute has been held to have no greater significance than that no property, as that term is understood in connection with false pretenses, is to be excepted.^{89.5}

The lien of a mortgage being effective between the parties, it constitutes a criminal offense to obtain its release by means of false representations, even though the mortgage was not properly recorded.⁹⁰ One who obtains from another, by false pretense, the surrender and release of a written obligation which on its face constitutes a valuable right of action, cannot be heard to say that it is no offense under the law because the right could be avoided by a plea of usury.⁹¹

The value or quantity of the property obtained is immaterial,⁹² except in so far as it may affect the degree of the crime, see infra § 35, or the punishment, see infra § 56.

§ 27. — Written Instruments and Signatures Thereto

Under some statutes, obtaining a person's signature to a written instrument by false pretenses is an offense. The instrument must be one of value, must have been delivered or be binding when signed, and must be such as might cause loss to the signer; but there need not have been actual loss.

Obtaining the signature of a person to a written instrument by false pretenses is expressly made an indictable offense by some statutes.⁹³ The instru-

Reason for rule

Land being "incapable of larcenous asportation, it was not regarded as requiring at the hands of the criminal law the same protection as personalty. Since it could not be carried away and dissipated like chattels, although a man might be deprived of his landed estate by means of fraudulent practices and devices, yet the property was bound to remain stationary and accessible to the reach of the law, and he was relegated to the civil courts for his redress of the wrong."

In California

(1) It was held in an early case that the statute did not include real property.

Cal.—People v. Cummings, 46 P. 284, 114 C. 437.

(2) Subsequently, an amendment added, after the word "property," the words "whether real or personal," but in view of a provision in the statute making the offense punishable as for larceny, the amendment was held meaningless, since larceny does not cover real property, and the early rule was adhered to.

Cal.—People v. Folcey, 247 P. 916, 78 C.A. 62.

(3) Later cases, however, have construed the statute so as to give effect to the words "whether real or personal," holding that real property may be the subject of the offense.

Forgery

(1) Under some statutes it is an indictable offense to obtain a signature to any written instrument the false making of which would be punishable as forgery.

(2) The forgery referred to in such a statute has been held to be common-law, rather than statutory, forgery.

Ky.—Greenwell v. Commonwealth, 317 S.W.2d 859.

ment signed must be such as might possibly cause loss or injury to the person signing it,⁹⁴ but it is not essential that actual loss or injury be sustained.⁹⁵ The mere obtaining of a signature is not an offense; it is necessary that the signature be attached to some written instrument of value,⁹⁶ and that there be a delivery of the instrument,⁹⁷ or that the instrument be of such a character as exposes the signer to liability as soon as it is signed.⁹⁸ The offense is complete when the instrument is signed⁹⁹ and delivered.¹

The fact that the instrument recites that accused had made no representations does not absolve him from responsibility if he in fact obtained the signature by false pretenses.²

§ 28. Loss to Prosecutor

Under most authorities, the crime is not committed unless the person from whom the property is obtained is defrauded; but it is not necessary that he suffer actual pecuniary loss, it being sufficient if he does not receive the thing promised or represented. If accused gets only what is justly due him, he is held not guilty by some authorities, but others oppose this view.

In order for the offense to arise, a detriment or injury to the prosecutor has been required.^{2,50} Thus, while the statutes do not in express language require that the person from whom the property is obtained should be defrauded thereby, but only that it be obtained with intent to defraud him, nevertheless it is a general rule that the crime is not committed unless he is in fact defrauded,³ although under some statutes it has been said to be unnecessary

Separate offenses

The obtaining of money by false pretenses and the obtaining of a signature on a note or other written instrument by false pretenses are separate offenses under statute.

Receipt and surrender of property

Where defendant and another, having induced the complaining witness to give his notes on a stock subscription, which they were unable to negotiate, fraudulently induced him to give his note to a third person for an automobile, representing that they could sell it for cash and use the proceeds for his benefit, with no intention of doing so, and, after obtaining the automobile, converted it to their own use, it was immaterial that the complaining witness received the automobile for his note, although as between him and the seller of the automobile the note was voluntary and binding.

that the victim be actually defrauded or injured.⁴ Hence, as a rule, the crime is not committed if the prosecutor gets out of the transaction just what he bargained for.⁵

Except under a few statutes,⁶ it is not necessary, to constitute an offense, that the prosecutor has suffered, or will necessarily suffer, actual pecuniary loss;⁷ if he has been placed by the fraud of accused in such a position that he may eventually suffer loss,⁸ or if he does not receive for the money or property parted with the thing promised or represented by accused, even though he receives something else, regardless of whether such thing received is of equal value, less value, or no value at all,⁹ it is sufficient. Accused is not relieved from criminal liability by the fact that the person defrauded may eventually make himself whole in some mode not contemplated at the time he parted with the property;¹⁰ and, as appears infra § 37, it is no defense that the prosecutor has recovered, or may eventually recover, for any loss sustained.

A prosecutor may be none the less defrauded even though the property parted with was applied by accused to the purpose for which it was delivered;¹¹ and the fact that the victim was defrauded of only part of the money parted with, the remainder being applied for the purpose for which it was delivered, does not affect guilt.¹² Thus, a complete loss of property need not be shown.^{12.5}

Failure to deliver articles under ban of law. Even where intoxicating liquor is contraband and without market value, it is a thing of value, and one who has by false pretenses induced another to part with his money for such liquor is guilty if he fails to deliver it or delivers something else in its place;¹³ but, where one by reason of false representations parts with his money in order to obtain counterfeit money, no offense is committed if such counterfeit money is not delivered, as it is not a thing of value and the possession of it would have been criminal.¹⁴

Obtaining what is justly due. It has been held that, regardless of the fraudulent means or devices employed, accused is not guilty where he gets only what is due him,¹⁵ as where he procures the payment of a debt due,¹⁶ or possession of property to which he is entitled,¹⁷ for the reason that no injury is done,¹⁸ or that there is a want of fraudulent intent,¹⁹ or for both reasons.²⁰ However, other decisions criticize and greatly limit this rule,²¹ or deny it entirely;²² and certainly the rule cannot exonerate accused where the facts do not come within it.²³

§ 29. To Whom Pretense Made

The false pretense need not be made directly to the person from whom the property is obtained, and is sufficient if made to an agent or the public generally. Authorities differ as to the sufficiency of a pretense made to a third person.

It is not necessary that the false pretense be made directly to the person from whom the property is obtained;²⁴ it is sufficient if it is made to an agent,²⁵ or even to the public generally by an advertisement.²⁶ It has also been held sufficient if the pretense is made to a third person;²⁷ but under other authority a representation made to a third person is insufficient even if it is intended to be ultimately reported to the victim.²⁸ If the false pretense is made to an agent who has authority to part with the property obtained, it is sufficient, even though the principal does not act thereon otherwise than through the agent.²⁹

The offense of obtaining goods from a firm by false pretense may be committed by pretenses made to one partner.³⁰ A representation to an officer or agent of a corporation to obtain money from the corporation is a representation to the corporation;³¹ and a corporation may be the victim of swindling.³² Moreover, the confidence of a body politic may be imposed on, just as may that of a private person or a private corporation.^{32.5}

Testimony in judicial inquiry. A prosecution for obtaining money by false pretense cannot be predicated on false testimony given in a judicial inquiry.³³

§ 30. Particular Acts, Transactions, or Subject Matters

A promise to perform an act in the future is within the meaning of the word "statement" as used in the statute.

Purpose of statute

The statute was passed to protect the Federal Home Loan Banks from fraudulent attempts to secure favorable action on applications for loans and like matters.

U.S.—Reass v. U. S., supra.

The meaning of the word "make,"

as used in the statute is, to put forth, give out, deliver, as to make a speech; the mere assembling of the material and its arrangement in a written composition containing the misrepresentations of fact can have no effect, and it is only when they are communicated to the lending bank that the crime takes place.

"Home relief" and "work relief" are both included.

N.Y.—People v. La Face, supra.

Effectiveness of misrepresentation

The essence of the crime is misrepresentation in the relief application, not consummation of the fraud, and it is immaterial whether relief is actually obtained or obtainable; hence defendant, if falsely representing lack of bank account when applying to public welfare department for work relief, could be convicted notwithstanding work relief was obtainable only from emergency work bureau.

§ 31. — Cheating or Fraudulent Practices in Sports or Games

Cheating or defrauding another in, or by means of, certain games may be indictable under express statutory provision.

Under express statutory provision, a person who cheats or defrauds another in, or by means of, certain games may be guilty of an offense analogous to that of obtaining by false pretenses.⁶⁴

§ 32. — Confidence Game

A confidence game, within the meaning of statutes directed against it, is any scheme whereby a swindler wins the confidence of his victim and, by taking advantage of such confidence, swindles him out of his money or property. The confidence must be won by a trick, device, false representation, or swindling operation, and the property must be obtained by a betrayal of the confidence won. A token or symbol, as distinguished from mere words, is required by some statutes.

Statutes in several jurisdictions are directed against the obtaining of money or property by the form of swindling known as the "confidence game."⁶⁵ The purpose of these statutes is to provide for a class of false representations not included in other statutes,^{65.5} and where a statute provides that it is to be liberally construed, care should be exercised so that its purpose and usefulness will not be defeated by illogical construction or loose language.^{65.10}

The term "confidence game" cannot easily be defined so as to cover all the cases falling within it, since schemes devised for the swindling of others "are as various as the mind of man is suggestive;"⁶⁶ the term has a relative and variable meaning,^{66.5} each case depending on its peculiar circumstances.^{66.10}

A confidence game has been held to be an elaborate scheme developed to play on the credulity, sym-

confidence-game statute is not violated by a breach of confidence honestly obtained, as through regular business dealings.⁷¹ Further, the money or property must be obtained by the betrayal of the confidence so won, for no swindling operation or fraudulent obtaining of another's property can constitute a confidence game unless the element of abuse of confidence is a part thereof.⁷²

Inasmuch as a confidence game does not include every fraud,^{72.5} obtaining money or property by false pretenses is not enough to convict of obtaining it by the confidence game,⁷³ for the crime of obtaining by false pretenses is distinct from the crime of obtaining by confidence game,⁷⁴ the distinction lying in the means employed,⁷⁵ although the element of false pretenses obviously enters into the confidence game.⁷⁶

If the transaction is in fact a swindling operation, its form is immaterial;^{76.5} consequently, it is immaterial that the form assumed is that of a lawful contract or business transaction,⁷⁷ that a corporate

Confidence in innocent third person

Where accused induced a bank to cash for him a check drawn by one who had, to accused's knowledge, insufficient funds on deposit in bank on which check was drawn, it was no defense that the paying bank paid the check, not because of its confidence in accused, but because of its confidence in an innocent third party who stated to the bank that he was positive the check was all right, which representation accused adopted by his presence and silence.

Sufficiency of device

(1) Where accused obtained stock in return for purported note which bore printed heading and signature of a company with its address so as to create impression of a substantial business location, and which accused signed in pencil ostensibly as a minor representative, but accused was the company, and room at stated address had been rented for a few days only, the purported note was a "false token" or a "bogus token."

(2) Selling a worthless or nonexisting business not by mere words alone but by employing in addition the instrumentality of an office furnished in a manner which would lead the prosecutor to believe that the representations of accused with respect to the business were true.

Under the Minnesota swindling statute, which does not in terms refer to the confidence game but denounces the obtaining of money or property by means of three-card monte, or of any other form or device, sleight of hand, or other means, by use of cards or instruments of like character, or by any other instrument, trick, or device, the rule stated in the text has been followed.

Minn.—State v. Yurkiewicz, 292 N.W. 782, 208 Minn. 71.

False representation or pretense

(1) A false representation or pretense may alone constitute the means of obtaining the confidence through the betrayal of which the property is obtained.

Ill.—People v. Burley, 192 N.E. 689, 357 Ill. 584—People v. Klapperich, 170 N.E. 202, 338 Ill. 406—People v. Schneider, 158 N.E. 448, 327 Ill. 270—People v. Harrington, 142 N. E. 246, 310 Ill. 613.

Utah.—State v. Scott, 175 P.2d 1016, 111 Utah 9.

(2) However, it has been held that a false pretense which is sufficient to authorize conviction under the statute relating to fraud by false pretenses will not sustain conviction under the statute relating to confidence game unless a trick or device is employed to gain the confidence of the victim, although the trick need not involve a token or symbol as distinguished from mere statements, made in connection with acts done with the intent to cheat and defraud.

Ariz.—Clark v. State, 89 P.2d 1077, 53 Ariz. 416.

81. Express money order

Obtaining money by a bogus express money order is within the statute defining as a crime the obtaining or attempting to obtain money by means of any false or bogus check "or by any other means, instrument or device commonly called the confidence game," the statute including any instrument similar to a bank check or draft of the nature of commercial paper for the payment of money.

Ill.—People v. Shaw, 133 N.E. 208, 300 Ill. 451.

Accordingly, a bogus check has been held sufficient to convict one under the statute;^{82.5} but it has also been held that the manner of passing the check and other circumstances surrounding the transaction must be shown before it may be considered as part of a confidence game,^{82.10} and under some circumstances the drawing of a check on a bank in which the drawer has no funds,^{82.15} or insufficient funds,^{82.20} or his innocent possession of a fictitious check,^{82.25} without more does not constitute a crime under the statute. It has been further held that accused need not be a confidence man to be convicted for a violation of a statute punishing the obtaining of money by use of the confidence game by means of a false or bogus check.^{82.30}

The confidence of a body politic may be imposed on, so as to warrant prosecution for the confidence game, just as may that of a person or a private corporation.^{82.35}

Bunco and bunco-steering. "Bunco" is a name applied to certain types of confidence games.⁸³ A bunco game has been held separate and distinct from the crime of obtaining money or property by false pretenses^{83.5} and from the crime of obtaining or attempting to obtain money by the use of a confidence game.^{83.10}

The word "game," as used in this connection, means a gambling device contrived, although masked

as a legitimate operation, to bilk the victim of his wager by manipulation.^{83.15} The statute defining the offense is aimed at the swindler rather than against the inanimate paraphernalia so used, and the user's design and conduct give the game its character.^{83.20} It is not an essential element of the offense that the victim shall have reposed confidence in the swindler.^{83.25}

In at least one jurisdiction, whoever lures, entices, or persuades another to any place, on any pretense, and then by duress or fraud compels such person to win or lose, or to advance or loan money, or to execute or give his note or other obligation, either for money or anything of value, or to part with anything of value on any game or wager, or by means of any trick, device, or artifice is guilty of bunco steering.⁸⁴ Under such a statute, the word "part" means to relinquish a connection of any kind; it is not necessary under such a statute that the victim part with title, nor is it essential that he should have had legal title to the thing parted with.⁸⁵

§ 33. — False Personation of Officer or Another Person

One who obtains money or property by falsely personating, or representing himself to be, another, or an officer, may be guilty of obtaining property by false pretenses.

Personation not shown

Where it appeared that the prosecuting witness, when confronted by his creditor and defendant and told that he "had better settle up," may have yielded his property through fear of arrest, knowing that defendant occasionally made arrests, it was held that, where defendant made no threats of arrest or accusations, and did not say that he was an officer, he belongs to an organization,^{87.5} or that he has a warrant for the arrest of the prosecutor,⁸⁸ is, if all the other essential elements are present, guilty of obtaining money or property by false pretenses. In this connection it may be noted that, as appears in False Personation, in some jurisdictions it is made a crime, distinct from obtaining money or property by false pretenses, to personate another or to personate a public officer.

§ 34. — Fraudulent Presentation of Claims to Public Officers

Presenting false claims to public officers for allowance or payment is an offense under express statutes, as well as under general statutes as to false pretenses.

In some jurisdictions it is an offense, under express statutes, to present false claims to public officers for allowance or payment.⁸⁹ The authority of the officer to pay such a claim has been held to be an essential element of such offense.⁹⁰ For the offense to be committed, the claim must be presented,⁹¹ although it need not be regular in form⁹² and need not be presented or verified in the statutory manner;⁹³ and the crime is complete when the claim has been presented, even though no money has been obtained thereby.⁹⁴

Where accused had approved a false claim against the county which was presented by claimant to the county clerk, who issued a warrant on which claimant obtained money from the county treasurer, the clerk, and not the treasurer, was the person deceived, so as to justify conviction of accused as an accomplice to the swindle of the clerk.^{94.5}

Aside from such special statutes, one who with an intent to defraud obtains, or attempts to obtain, money by presenting a false claim to a public official is indictable under the general statutes as to false pretenses.⁹⁵

§ 35. Degrees of Offenses

At common law, the offense is not a felony; under some statutes it is a misdemeanor, under others a felony. Under some the degree of the offense depends on the character or value of the property obtained or the method of obtaining it; under others the degree does not depend on such value, or the degree may be made discretionary with the judge.

At common law, the obtaining of goods by false pretenses is not a felony.^{95.50} Under some statutes, this and like offenses are misdemeanors;⁹⁶ under others they are felonies.⁹⁷ Under the statutes in his acts did not constitute the crime charged.

Check kiting

That the misdemeanor offense of giving a check with insufficient funds in bank to meet it is one of the series of acts in "check kiting" does not take "check kiting" out of the definition of the felony offenses defined by statutes relating to false pretenses and confidence games or fraudulent checks.

U.S.—Fidelity & Cas. Co. of N. Y. v. Bank of Altenburg, C.A.Mo., 216 F. 2d 294, certiorari denied 75 S.Ct. 440, 348 U.S. 952, 99 L.Ed. 744.

at least one jurisdiction, defendant may be prosecuted either as a cheat and punished as a misdemeanor, or he may be prosecuted as for larceny.⁹⁸

Under some statutes, the degree of the offense depends on the character or value of the property obtained⁹⁹ or the method of obtaining it;¹ but under others it has been expressly decided that the degree of the offense does not depend on the value of the property obtained.² It has been held that the value of the property obtained, as fixing the degree of the offense, is to be measured by the actual loss suffered by the prosecutor in the transaction,³ but according to other authority the value of the property acquired is the test.⁴ Under one statute, it is discretionary with the judge, depending on the penalty he imposes, whether the offense is a felony or a misdemeanor.^{4.5}

Intent has been held immaterial in determining the degree of the offense.^{4.10}

§ 36. Attempts

An attempt to commit the crime of obtaining property by false pretenses is an offense, the elements of which are an intent to obtain by false pretense, the doing of an overt act toward obtaining the property by means of the pretense, and the failure so to obtain it.

An attempt to commit the crime of obtaining property by false pretenses, or a like crime, is an indictable offense.⁵ Such an attempt consists in an intent to obtain by the false pretense, or the like; the doing of some overt act toward obtaining the property by means of the false pretense, or the like; and the failure so to obtain the property.⁶ The act or acts which defendant has performed must be more than merely preparatory; they must reach far enough toward the accomplishment of the desired result to amount to the commencement of the consummation of the crime,⁷ and they must

Rule under worthless check law

The offense defined in the worthless check law is a degree of the statutory offense of obtaining money or property by false pretenses, even though it is an offense under a separate statute.

Ky.—Daily v. Commonwealth, 248 S.W.2d 425—Tartar v. Commonwealth, 102 S.W.2d 971, 267 Ky. 502.

Aggregate of separate amounts or items

(1) Where defendant obtains a sum of money by means of a false representation, and subsequently obtains other sums by reason of the same representation, each time he receives a sum of money a separate offense is committed, and if the sum received each time is less than the amount required to constitute a felony, defendant is guilty only of several misdemeanors and not of a felony, although the aggregate of the amounts received would be sufficient to make the crime a felony.

Cal.—People v. Serna, 110 P.2d 492, 43 C.A.2d 106—People v. Miles, 99 P.2d 551, 37 C.A.2d 373.

(2) Conviction of felony of swindling by securing check for more than fifty dollars by fraudulent representations that accused was agent of an insurance company was not erroneous because check represented premiums on two policies for two different persons, each premium being less than fifty dollars.

Tex.—Mitner v. State, 273 S.W. 565, 100 Tex.Cr. 455.

(3) Under the statute penalizing the willful intent to defraud by drawing or uttering a check for payment of money, knowing at the time that the maker has not sufficient funds in the bank for the payment thereof, and providing that if the total amount of all such checks does not exceed fifty dollars the offense is punishable only by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one year, each violation of the statute may be a felony regardless of the amount of the individual check, but the offense is not punishable as a felony unless the aggregate of the bad checks involved in the offenses is more than fifty dollars.

(2) Where thief writes false pretense, and mails it to his victim, mailing is part of group or aggregate of acts which together make crime, and is an attempt.

N.Y.—People v. Werblow, 148 N.E. 786, 241 N.Y. 55.

(3) Attempt to commit larceny by means of worthless checks may be based on the mere drawing, uttering, or delivering of a check, draft, or order, without sufficient funds or be adapted to secure that end.⁸ If accused has proceeded thus far, and has not consummated the crime, he is guilty of the attempt,⁹ even though it develops that for some reason unknown to him he could not have completed the crime,¹⁰ or although the reason for his failure is that the person intended to be defrauded is unable or unwilling to part with the property sought to be obtained.¹¹

It is not necessary, in order to establish an intent, that the prosecutor should have been deceived,¹² or should have relied on the false pretenses¹³ and have parted with his property;¹⁴ indeed, if property is actually obtained in consequence of the prosecutor's reliance on the false pretenses, the offense is complete and an indictment for an attempt will not lie.¹⁵ Accused cannot be convicted of an attempt to obtain money or property by false pretenses where, had he succeeded in what he attempted, he would not be guilty of the crime of obtaining by false pretenses,¹⁶ as where the conduct involved is not prohibited by law.^{16.5}

Where an order or warrant has been obtained by fraudulent representations, in order to sustain a conviction for an attempt it must be conceded that such order or warrant was not a legal obligation, for if it was a legal one there could be no such thing as an attempt to secure it.¹⁷

Grade of offense. In some jurisdictions an attempt to commit the offense is a misdemeanor;¹⁸ in others it is a felony,¹⁹ or the grade depends on what the punishment would have been if the crime had been consummated.²⁰

§ 37. Defenses

As a general rule, it is no defense that accused made, offered to make, or intended to make, restitution to the prosecutor, or that the latter condoned the crime, or was himself guilty of a wrong or was negligent; and the prosecutor's motives are generally immaterial.

On the principle that the injury is to the state, accused cannot plead that the prosecutor has condoned the crime and settled with accused,²¹ unless the statute permits such a settlement.²² Where one is indicted for presenting a false claim, an offer made by him to change or correct it, after it has been presented, is immaterial as to his guilt.²³ The fact that accused was entitled to a part of the money obtained by false pretenses does not excuse him;²⁴ nor is it a defense that accused believed that the money he obtained was a fair compensation for

Where intent is a constituent element of an offense, facts showing lack or nonexistence of the intent constitute a defense;^{25.5} but wrongful acts which are knowingly or intentionally committed cannot be justified or excused on the ground of an innocent intent, since the color of the act determines the complexion of the intent.^{25.10}

It is not a defense that the prosecutor has signed a paper stating that he did not rely on the pretense, if it appears that he did, in fact, rely on it in parting with his property, and signed the paper thereafter.²⁶ One who has made false representations in regard to the title of real estate and has induced another to exchange property of value therefor by reason of such false representations cannot escape criminal liability by having an agent deliver the deed instead of delivering it in person.²⁷ Where all of the essential elements are present, it is not a defense that accused had an option to buy the property on which he defaulted;^{27.5} and where false representations are orally made by accused as to the absence of encumbrances, it is not a defense that a subsequent written contract contains a provision guarding against any encumbrances, thus nullifying the previous oral statements.^{27.10} The Factor's Act has been held inapplicable to these cases as a defense.^{27.15} The fact that the acts and conduct of an individual may result in imposing civil liability for damages on him,^{27.20} or that the victim tries by means of civil action to recover his losses,^{27.25} does not preclude prosecution for a criminal offense committed in connection with such acts and conduct. The fact that accused was paid the money involved as wages pursuant to a contractual relationship between employer and employee does not preclude a determination that money is obtained under false pretenses.^{27.30}

In a prosecution for the making, uttering, and delivering of a worthless check, a statutory requirement of a certain number of days written notice, or demand, to pay has been held met, or accused, by his conduct and promises, may be held to have waived the notice.^{27.35}

Recovery, restitution, or repayment. Since, as appears supra § 28, it is not essential that the prosecutor should have suffered, or have been put in a position where he will necessarily suffer, actual loss, it is no defense that the prosecutor has recovered,²⁸ or could recover,²⁹ for any loss which he has sustained, or that he has regained possession of the property.³⁰ Likewise, in accordance with the statement, supra § 24, that the offense is complete when the property is obtained, it is no defense that accused has returned,³¹ intends to return,^{31.5} or has offered to return,³² the property obtained, or that he has paid for it³³ or offered to pay for it.³⁴

Where money has been obtained, it is no defense that accused is able and willing to repay it,³⁵ intends to repay it,^{35.5} or has repaid it.³⁶ It is no defense that accused has offered in good faith to make good his representations³⁷ or has applied the money toward making them good.³⁸

Since, as appears supra § 7, the intent of accused need not be to cause the prosecutor ultimate loss, it is no defense that, when he committed the crime, he intended to return the property,³⁹ to repay the money,⁴⁰ or to make good his representations,⁴¹ at some future time.

The effect of payment of a worthless check after its issuance and dishonor is considered supra § 21.

Contributory guilt of prosecutor. A crime being an act directed against the state, the state cannot be estopped from prosecuting it by the act of any individual, and hence the fact that the party defrauded by the false pretense was himself guilty of some fraud or wrong in the transaction is no defense to accused, according to most of the authorities,⁴² as where the victim was willing to engage in the criminal activity;^{42.5} but there is authority to the contrary.⁴³

Negligence or carelessness of prosecutor. Where the negligence of the prosecutor, or his failure to exercise due diligence, is interposed as a defense, it is, where unmixed with other considerations, generally held to be immaterial.⁴⁴ However, it has been indicated that there may be such carelessness as to prevent conviction,⁴⁵ as in the case of carelessness so gross that the law will impute consent to the person parting with his property,⁴⁶ or so gross as to amount to fraud and work an estoppel.⁴⁷

The motive of the prosecutor in procuring the institution of the prosecution is immaterial,⁴⁸ and, consequently, it is no defense that his object is to collect a debt or obtain restitution,⁴⁹ although the courts look with grave disapproval on prosecutions which are thus inspired.⁵⁰

The motive with which the money or property was parted with by its owner is also immaterial,⁵¹ and it is usually held that it is no defense that the object of the prosecutor in parting with his money was charitable and not mercenary,⁵² the statute not being purely for the protection of persons in commercial dealings,⁵³ but there is authority to the contrary.⁵⁴

§ 38. Persons Liable

- a. In general
- b. Aiders, abettors, and accessories

a. In General

One who commits the offense through an innocent agent is solely guilty; one who has obtained by false pretenses is not relieved of liability by the fact that he acted as agent or attorney, and one may be liable under a bad-check statute whether he drew the check on his personal account or in a representative capacity.

When one commits the crime by means of an innocent agent, he,⁵⁵ and he alone,⁵⁶ is guilty; but the false representations of an agent cannot be imputed to his principal in the absence of conspiracy or authorization,⁵⁷ and one who has obtained property by false pretenses cannot be relieved of criminal liability on the ground that he was acting as an agent in obtaining possession of such property.⁵⁸ The fact that one submitting a false claim is acting as attorney for claimant,⁵⁹ or that one obtaining money by false representations is acting as attorney for the person to whom he makes the representations,⁶⁰ does not relieve him of liability.

As appears in Corporations § 1364 e, a corporation may be convicted of obtaining property or money by means of false pretense; and, as appears in Infants § 95, an infant may be liable.

A cropper who is himself to perform services and labor in making the crop is within the provisions of a statute making it illegal to procure property on a contract to perform services with intent to defraud.⁶¹

Worthless checks. Under a statute making it an offense to obtain property with fraudulent intent by means of a bad check, one who thus obtains property is criminally liable regardless of whether he draws the check on his personal account or in some representative capacity.⁶² The endorser of a bad check is also liable under the statute if he is in some way connected with the scheme to defraud.^{62.5} When the offense is committed, the owner of the firm on whose account the check is drawn is the principal, even though an agent delivers the check.^{62.10}

A corporate officer has been held criminally liable for uttering and delivering a check of the corporation with knowledge of its worthlessness;⁶³ but there is authority for the view that an officer who signs a corporation's worthless checks in a representative capacity cannot be prosecuted as "maker," "drawer," "utterer," or "deliverer" thereof.⁶⁴

b. Aiders, Abettors, and Accessories

Where the offense is a misdemeanor, all engaged are principals, and under statutory provision this may be true where it is a felony. A participant with others in a scheme or agreement to obtain property by false pretenses is chargeable with the acts of the other participants in furtherance thereof.

Where the offense is a misdemeanor, all engaged are principals,⁶⁵ and this is also true where it is a felony and the distinctions between principals and accessories in cases of felony have been abrogated by statute.⁶⁶

A participant with others in a scheme to obtain property by false pretenses is chargeable with the acts of the other participants in furtherance of the scheme.⁶⁷ Thus, false pretenses made by one of several in pursuance of an agreement between them

are chargeable to all;⁶⁸ and, where accused was a party to a scheme or transaction entered into to defraud by false pretenses, and shares or is interested in the fruits thereof, he is none the less guilty because he was not present when the false pretenses were made,⁶⁹ or when the property was delivered,⁷⁰ or because he never actually met with the other persons accused.⁷¹

So, too, the mere fact that one of several persons obtaining the property by agreement received no share of the property,⁷² or that the false pretense was made for the benefit of another and not for accused,^{72.5} does not make him the less a party.

However, one does not commit the crime by merely being present when the property is received by another and taking part of the property;⁷³ and mere knowledge on the part of one person that certain representations made by another are false, without aiding and abetting therein, will not render such person criminally liable,⁷⁴ although if such person, being present, encourages and corroborates the statements of the other, with knowledge of their falsity, he is liable.⁷⁵

A person may be guilty of "aiding and abetting"

II. PROSECUTION AND PUNISHMENT

A. INDICTMENT OR INFORMATION

§ 39. Requisites and Sufficiency in General

- a. In general
- b. Language of statute

a. In General

An indictment or information for obtaining property by false pretense or false token, or for a similar offense, must allege with precision and certainty every fact necessary to be proved in order to convict accused of the crime.

An indictment or information for obtaining property by false pretense or false token, or for a similar offense under special statutes, must allege with precision and certainty every fact necessary to be proved in order to convict accused of the crime;⁷⁸ in the application of this principle, various indictments or informations have been held sufficient,^{78.5} while other indictments or informations have been

Crime held charged under particular statute

Information charging that accused fraudulently obtained automobile in exchange for realty described by him as free from encumbrances, but in fact encumbered by two mortgages, charged crime under statute relating to obtaining property by false pretenses, and not under that relating to confidence game and bogus checks. Okl.—Ex parte Harman, 247 P.2d 302, 95 Okl.Cr. 411.

Fictitious or worthless checks

(1) Essential elements to be alleged in information charging issuance of fictitious check are uttering and publishing of check, knowing it to be fictitious.

Cal.—People v. Carmona, 251 P. 315, 80 C.A. 159.

(2) An information charging defendant with obtaining money from A. by making, uttering, and delivering to her a draft on a firm named knowing there was no such firm and that said draft was false and fictitious, held not to charge an offense of making a false and fictitious bill, note, or check, but the offense charged, if any, was under the swindling statute relating to obtaining money by means of a false or bogus check or written instrument. Ariz.—Patterson v. State, 215 P. 1096, 25 Ariz. 276, 35 A.L.R. 366.

(3) Indictment held to charge offense of uttering forged instrument and not that of obtaining money or property by false pretenses. Iowa.—Lewis v. Hollowell, 227 N.W. 140—Plants v. Hollowell, 214 N.W. 552.

(4) Indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses, showing merely representation that check was good, charged "misdemeanor."

Iowa.—Woods v. Hollowell, 214 N.W. 675, 204 Iowa 186.

(5) Information charging that defendant obtained money by false representation that his check was good held to charge unindictable misdemeanor.

Iowa.—Conkling v. Hollowell, 214 N.W. 717, 203 Iowa 1374.

(6) In prosecution for giving or drawing check without sufficient funds, with intent to defraud, the word "or" should not have been used in complaint alleging that defendant "gave or drew" a check.

Tex.—Greeson v. State, 147 S.W.2d 804, 141 Tex.Cr. 115.

(7) Indictment charging that defendant uttered and delivered check, knowing that "he had not sufficient funds in or credit with" bank for payment thereof, without alleging that he drew the check, or that he knew that drawer thereof did not have sufficient funds available for its payment, held insufficient.

Ala.—Parker v. State, 103 So. 76, 20 Ala.App. 470.

(8) An indictment alleging that accused obtained possession of an automobile by false pretenses and fraudulent representations in giving and drawing a check on a named bank without sufficient funds therein to pay such check, and setting out a check signed by another, but failing to allege that accused indorsed the check or that the drawer had no funds in the bank, or that accused represented that she did, held vulnerable to demurrer.

Tex.—James v. State, 257 S.W. 886, 96 Tex.Cr. 308.

(9) Indictment for obtaining waiver of lien by worthless check, not alleging knowledge of insufficiency of funds was insufficient, although it alleged fraudulent intent.

Ill.—People v. Balalas, 166 N.E. 47, 334 Ill. 444.

(10) Failure of indictment to allege nonpayment of check on presentation held not fatal defect, in prosecution for issuing check with insufficient funds.

Ala.—Caughlan v. State, 114 So. 280, 22 Ala.App. 220.

held insufficient.^{78,10} It must be directly alleged in the indictment or information that the person accused committed the acts constituting the offense,⁷⁹ but no allegations as to how the property was obtained from the prosecutor, whether as a gift, a loan, or otherwise, are necessary.⁸⁰ The state does not have to plead its evidence,⁸¹ and immaterial facts need not be alleged.⁸²

Matters which may constitute a defense need not be negated in the indictment where there is no such exception or proviso in the statute defining the offense,⁸³ especially where such matter would not constitute a defense;⁸⁴ and, where an exception is contained in a proviso and not in the enacting clause, it is not necessary to negative the exception in the indictment.⁸⁵

b. Language of Statute

It is sufficient to charge the offense of obtaining property by false pretenses in the language, or substantially in the language, of the statute creating it where the statute sets forth with the requisite precision and certainty all the elements of the offense.

In accordance with the general rule, it is sufficient to charge the offense in the language, or substantially in the language, of the statute creating it, where the statute sets forth with the requisite precision and certainty all the elements of the offense;⁸⁶ but, where the statute does not describe and define

Under a statute which removes the distinction between an accessory before the fact and a principal, an indictment for larceny by false pretenses in obtaining an automobile is not insufficient because it did not allege that defendant was actually present to aid codefendant in making false pretenses and in getting possession of the vehicle.

Secreting automobile

Where an information for larceny by false pretenses alleged that defendants obtained an automobile and "unlawfully secreted, withheld, and appropriated it to their own use," the failure to allege the place of such secretion or withholding does not invalidate the information, and the addition of such an averment will be considered as mere harmless surplusage.

the offense, an indictment following the language of the statute is insufficient.⁸⁷ More particularity of statement is required where some intended element of the crime is omitted,⁸⁸ or where, by following the language of the statute, the indictment would not show prima facie that any crime had been committed,⁸⁹ or where the indictment would not sufficiently apprise accused of the charge against him.⁹⁰

The indictment need not charge the offense in the language of the statute, as it is sufficient if words of similar import are used,⁹¹ or if the indictment describes the offense with more particularity than the statute.⁹²

The indictment need not charge a conclusion of law, even though the conclusion is part of the statutory definition of the offense,⁹³ but it must state all the circumstances which constitute the definition of the crime in the statute, so as to bring accused precisely within it,⁹⁴ and where the indictment fails to follow the statute in substance and as to substantial requisites it is bad.⁹⁵ An indictment is likewise bad which does not follow, but enlarges, the statute.⁹⁶

but such an intent need not be alleged where it is not a necessary element of the crime.⁹⁸ Where the crime is a felony, the intent must be alleged to have been felonious,⁹⁹ but this allegation is unnecessary where the crime is not a felony.¹

Under statutes making an intent to defraud a particular person² or to accomplish a particular result³ an element of the crime, the intent to defraud the one or to accomplish the other must be averred; but under other statutes it is not necessary for the indictment to charge an intent to defraud the one or to accomplish the other.⁴ Also, under statutes as to certain analogous offenses, an averment of intent is unnecessary.⁵ Under a statute, modeled after 30 Geo. II c 24 § 1, making it an element of the offense that the property is "designedly" obtained, the indictment must allege that the property was "designedly" obtained or some word equivalent to or broad enough to include the statutory word must be used.⁶

(1) General Rules

The indictment, as a general rule, must set out the false pretense with such particularity as to enable the court to determine whether it is such a pretense as comes within the statute, and as to apprise the accused of the charge against him.

Although there is authority to the effect that where a charge is in the form set out in the statute, it is not necessary to recite the false pretenses employed,^{6,50} it is the general rule that it is not sufficient merely to aver in the indictment that accused obtained the property by a false pretense; the pleader must go further and not only set out the pretense, but set it out with such particularity as to enable the court to determine whether it is such a pretense as comes within the statute, and as to apprise accused of the charge against him.⁷ This requirement will minutely than is necessary, such description is part of the indictment and cannot be treated as surplusage.¹⁵

Trick or game. As a general rule, where obtaining property by a trick or game is charged, the indictment must set forth with particularity the trick or game practiced.¹⁶ In some jurisdictions, however, this rule has been changed by statutory provisions as to what is known as "the confidence game," as discussed supra § 32, and an indictment in the language of the statute is generally held sufficient;¹⁷ but there is authority to the contrary.¹⁸

(2) Where Pretense in Writing

It is ordinarily sufficient to set out the purport of a written instrument constituting the false pretense.

When the false pretense is in writing or consists wholly or in part in the use of a written instrument, the writing need not be set out in hæc verba, it being sufficient, as in the case of a verbal pretense, to set out the purport of it,¹⁹ unless some question turns on the form or construction of the instrument,²⁰ or some legal description of it is given in the indictment, the accuracy of which it may be material for the court to determine.²¹ It has been held, however, that where a written instrument is the decisive inducement, the real false pretense that caused the owner to part with his property, and constitutes the substantive part of the offense, it should be set forth in the indictment.²²

Where a written instrument is only a step in the transaction, or an incident of the offense, it need not be set out,²³ nor is a particular description of it necessary.²⁴ An indictment for cheating by false pretenses, setting forth a certificate of stock as the false token with which the fraud was committed, need not set forth in what manner the certificate could be used to deceive;²⁵ and, where an indictment for obtaining money by the use of a false writing sets forth the writing in full, the fact that it does not charge in detail how the fraud is committed does not vitiate it.²⁶

(3) Where Several Pretenses Employed

An indictment need not aver all the pretenses used to obtain the property.

The indictment need not aver all the pretenses used, it being sufficient if it alleges one pretense which was an inducing cause of the imposition.²⁷ Also, the fact that some of the matters alleged do not constitute false pretenses will not render the indictment defective, where other matters are alleged which constitute false pretenses.²⁸

b. By and to Whom Made, and Who Injured

Ordinarily, an indictment for obtaining property by false pretenses must allege that the accused made the pretense in question, and name the person to whom it was made, as well as the person injured thereby.

An indictment for obtaining property by false pretense must allege specifically that accused made the pretense in question;²⁹ and, while an allegation in an indictment against several defendants that defendants made the false pretenses is a sufficient allegation that each of them made the false pretenses,³⁰ where two persons acting in concert obtain property by false pretenses the indictment must allege which, if only one, made the false pretenses.³¹

The indictment must also state to whom the pretense was made,³² and who was defrauded thereby,³³ unless his name is unknown,³⁴ in which case that fact should be averred as a reason for not setting

it out.³⁵ If the false pretenses are not made to the person from whom the goods are obtained, the indictment must show the relation between them so that it may appear how the pretenses could have caused the injury.³⁶

Under some statutes, an indictment need not allege whether the injured party was a corporation, etc.,³⁷ but under other statutes, where the party injured is not an individual, it is necessary to state whether it is a corporation, partnership, or joint-stock association.³⁸ In such jurisdictions it is sufficient to allege that the pretense was made to, or that the person defrauded was, a corporation, either private³⁹ or municipal,⁴⁰ and it is not necessary to state the name or names of the person or persons connected with the corporation to whom the false representations were made⁴¹ where no verbal representations were made,⁴² or where it would be impracticable to

Partnership. According to some of the authorities, it is sufficient to allege that the false pretenses were made to a partnership by its firm name;⁴⁴ but according to others, where the persons alleged to have been defrauded compose a partnership, the indictment must contain the names of the individuals composing the partnership,⁴⁵ or a proper excuse for the omission.⁴⁶ Also, it has been held that an allegation in an indictment that false representations were made to a firm composed of certain persons, whose names are given, is not sufficiently definite, but the name of the specific person to whom such representations were made is necessary.⁴⁷

(2) An indictment is defective if it fails to charge that defendant did not in fact have sufficient funds in or credit with the bank on which the check is drawn for the payment thereof in full on its presentation, and that the same was not, and has not been, paid; and an allegation that the check was returned marked "No funds" is insufficient to charge such fact.

Miss.—State v. Puckett, 90 So. 113, 127 Miss. 415.

(3) Indictment for swindling by giving check held fatally defective, where there was no positive allegation that defendant did not have on deposit with drawee bank sufficient funds to pay check.

defense intelligently.⁵¹

Although it has been held that the indictment must allege the particulars in which the pretenses are false,⁵² and that a general averment that accused "falsely" represented, etc., is insufficient,⁵³ it has also been held that a general averment of falsity is sufficient,⁵⁴ unless the pretenses are of such nature that a negation of truth requires allegations affirmatively showing in what the falsehood consisted.⁵⁵ However, in alleging the falsity of the pretense, it is not necessary that all the facts be set forth in detail;⁵⁶ but negations which are in the nature of negatives pregnant and admit an implication which destroys or renders immaterial the effect of the pretenses charged are insufficient.⁵⁷

A general averment that the pretense was false will be deemed sufficient after verdict.⁵⁸

Several pretenses. Where several pretenses are alleged, they need not all be negated; as only one need be proved to convict, so only the one relied on for conviction need be negated;⁵⁹ but a conviction on a finding that a pretense relied on was false cannot be sustained under an indictment not alleging the falsity of such pretense.⁶⁰

allegation of the knowledge of the falsity of the representations made is not necessary, and words of similar import may be used.⁶³

Under statutes as to certain analogous offenses, it is not necessary to allege guilty knowledge of accused.⁶⁴

d. Effectiveness

The indictment or information must charge in terms or in substance that the property was obtained by means of the false pretense alleged.

The indictment or information must show that the property was obtained by means of the false pretense alleged.⁶⁵ While it should charge in terms or in substance that the person defrauded relied on the truth of the false statement, pretense, or token, and was induced thereby to part with his money or property,⁶⁶ no particular form of words is necessary for this purpose,⁶⁷ and any words that express this idea, or from which it can be clearly inferred, have been held sufficient.⁶⁸

An allegation that "by means of the false pretense," or "relying on the false pretense," or the like, is sufficient where it is apparent that the delivery of the property was the natural result of the pretense alleged.⁶⁹ However, when there appears to be no natural connection between the pretense and the delivery of the property, such additional facts as are necessary to show the relation must be alleged.⁷⁰

While in some jurisdictions it has been usual to allege specifically that the prosecutor believed the false representations to be true,⁷¹ this is not essential under the common form of statute.⁷² An averment of the prosecutor's belief, if necessary at all,⁷³ is sufficient without alleging that he believed such representations "to be true."⁷⁴ It has been held, however, that the indictment should directly and clearly allege that the person from whom the money or other thing of value was received was deceived by the false pretense or false token.⁷⁵

It is not necessary to allege specifically that the prosecutor relied on the pretense, if the connection between the pretense and the obtaining is otherwise sufficiently shown by the indictment;⁷⁶ nor is it necessary to allege specifically how the false pretense was calculated to induce the prosecutor to part with his property,⁷⁷ or that the false pretense was capable of inducing him to do so,⁷⁸ or that, except for the false pretense, the prosecutor would not have parted with it.⁷⁹ Where an indictment alleges a false statement, and the statement relates to a number of different facts, it is not necessary that the indictment should allege that loss resulted from each and all of these statements which proved untrue, but, if it is alleged that any one of the material false statements resulted in loss, the indictment will be sufficient.⁸⁰

The same general rules apply when the false pretense used is a token; the indictment must show that it was by means of the falseness of the token that accused was able to perpetrate the fraud,⁸¹ and these rules apply also to indictments for obtaining the signature of another by false pretenses,⁸² or for obtaining property by a promise of service.⁸³

An allegation of a false promise, as well as of a false pretense, as an inducement for parting with the property, will not invalidate the indictment.⁸⁴

A defect in the indictment arising from failure to show the connection between the false pretense and the obtaining is a material one,⁸⁵ and is not cured by verdict.⁸⁶

§ 43. — Obtaining Property

An indictment or information must allege, in terms or in substance, that accused obtained property.

It must be alleged in the indictment or information, in terms or in words equivalent thereto, that accused obtained property, since the obtaining is an essential element of the crime.⁸⁷

§ 44. — Property, Instrument, or Signature Obtained

- a. Description
- b. Ownership
- c. Quantity or number and value

a. Description

- (1) In general
- (2) Money, bank notes, and certificates of deposit
- (3) Instruments, signatures, etc.

(1) In General

The property alleged to have been obtained must be described with such certainty and particularity as to enable the jury to determine whether the property proved to have been obtained is the same as that on which the indictment was founded.

The property alleged to have been obtained must be described with such certainty and particularity as to enable the jury to determine whether the property proved to have been obtained is the same as that on which the indictment was founded, and to enable accused to make his defense intelligently,⁹⁰ and, although there is some authority to the contrary,⁹¹ it has been held to be the rule that the same certainty of description is required as is essential in indictments for larceny.⁹² However, the description is required to be only as particular as the nature of the case will admit,⁹³ and the property need not be described by its legal name;⁹⁴ but the description should not be in the alternative.⁹⁵

(2) Money, Bank Notes, and Certificates of Deposit

Where money is alleged to have been obtained, the indictment should describe it at least by the amount; money is not sufficiently described as "goods."

Where money is alleged to have been obtained, money or other thing of value was received therefor, was insufficient to set out an offense.

the indictment should describe it at least by the amount,⁹⁶ and it has been held sufficient to describe the money as a certain amount of the lawful money of prosecutor without stating the denomination of the various pieces, their number, or whether they were notes or coin,⁹⁷ especially when aided by an allegation that a more particular description is, to the grand jury, unknown.⁹⁸ However, in some jurisdictions a more particular description has been required,⁹⁹ unless it is specifically alleged that a more particular description is unknown to the grand jury,¹ it being held that the indictment should describe the money obtained with the same particularity and certainty as in an indictment for larceny.²

Money, being itself a measure of value, cannot be rendered more definite by an averment of value; hence an averment that accused obtained a certain number of dollars in money is sufficiently certain without alleging the value of the money.³ Where it is charged that accused obtained a certain sum of money indicated by figures preceded by a dollar mark, it will be assumed that the money so described is money of the United States and not money of a foreign country.⁴

While money has been held not sufficiently described as "goods,"⁵ or a certificate of deposit as

"money,"⁶ an information describing the property procured as a certain amount of currency at one place and in another as a deposit slip for such amount was held not fatally defective.⁷

(3) Instruments, Signatures, Etc.

When the thing obtained is a written instrument or a signature thereto, ordinarily it must be described with such certainty as to identify it when produced in evidence, and to enable the court to determine that it possessed legal efficacy.

While it has been held that an indictment for procuring the execution of a written instrument or signature thereto by false pretenses must set out a copy of the instrument,⁸ it has also been held that it is not necessary in describing the instrument to set it out in hæc verba,⁹ although it must be described with such certainty as to identify it when produced in evidence,¹⁰ so that accused may not subsequently be indicted for the same offense,¹¹ and to enable the court to determine that it possessed legal efficacy and therefore some value.^{11.5} An indictment for larceny, in obtaining a deed by false pretenses, sufficiently sets out the deed when it contains a description of the premises, a statement of the consideration, the names of the grantor and grantee, and the value of the deed.¹²

Lawful money of United States

The phrase "in the lawful money of the United States of America" in an indictment charging crime of fraudulently obtaining a sum of money does not mean necessarily that money was obtained in form of currency or coin or both currency and coin but means merely that amount which was fraudulently obtained represented that amount of real money of the United States and not any other kind of money or money of a foreign country.

b. Ownership

Ordinarily, an indictment for obtaining property by false pretenses must allege to whom the property obtained belonged, and the omission of such an allegation may render it fatally defective.

While, under some statutes relating to the obtaining of property by false pretenses and kindred offenses, it has been held not necessary to allege ownership of the property obtained,¹³ ordinarily the indictment must state to whom the property obtained belonged,¹⁴ or explain the absence of such averment.¹⁵ Also, it has been held that the indictment should substantially set up the ownership of accused of property had or claimed to be had by him and which the injured party believed he was getting.¹⁶

Where an allegation of ownership is necessary, it has been held by some authorities that the averment must be made with the same particularity and certainty as in the case of larceny,¹⁷ and the indictment should specifically allege that the ownership of the property is in the person alleged to have been deceived or in some one for whom such person was acting,¹⁸ as it is not sufficient that it may be gathered by inference from the other necessary averments that the ownership of the property is in some person named.¹⁹ According to other authorities, however, the ownership need not be stated by a direct allegation if facts are alleged which show the ownership clearly.²⁰ Names used in indictments with reference to the ownership of property will be taken to indicate persons.²¹

Alleging ownership of particular persons. It has been held sufficient to allege ownership in a person in possession of the goods,²² or in a person with authority to sell them,²³ and the ownership may properly be laid in a mortgagee.²⁴ Where property is obtained from an agent, ownership may be alleged to be in his principal,²⁵ and an indictment for obtaining money from the teller of a bank should allege ownership to be in the bank, instead of in the teller, as the money belongs to the bank.²⁶

An indictment for obtaining money from a railway company is sufficient, although title to the money is alleged to be in such company and not in receivers who are operating such railway.²⁷ By virtue of statutory provisions in some jurisdictions, where property is owned in common or jointly, the ownership may be alleged to be in all or either of the owners.²⁸ Where the property obtained belongs to a partnership, it is sufficient to charge the ownership of the goods to be in the partnership by its firm name,²⁹ or, under some statutes, ownership may be alleged in any one or more of the partners.³⁰

Effect of omitting averment. An averment of ownership of the property obtained is one not affecting the form by the substance of an indictment,³¹ and the omission of such an averment renders the indictment fatally defective,³² unless the indictment contains a legal excuse for the omission of such an averment.³³ However, it has been held that an erroneous allegation as to ownership of the property would not be fatal where there is sufficient certainty in the allegation to identify the act on which the prosecution is based.³⁴

c. Quantity or Number and Value

A statement of quantity or number is not essential if of no benefit to the accused. The value of the property obtained must be alleged where such value is made an element of the offense and the punishment therefor depends on such value.

Where a statement of the quantity or number of the articles taken would not benefit accused, such statement is not essential;³⁵ but, where such statement is made, it should be certain and not in the disjunctive.³⁶

Value. It has been held that the value of the property obtained need not be stated in the indictment,³⁷ and that an indictment alleging in substance that defendant obtained something of value is sufficient;³⁸ but under other authority the value of the property must be alleged where value is made an element of the offense, and the punishment therefor depends on such value.³⁹ Where accused is charged with obtaining several articles, it is not necessary to state specifically the value of each article.⁴⁰

While an allegation of loss may or may not be essential under the statute, the indictment or information should set forth facts sufficient to show that the prosecutor suffered a legal injury.

An indictment for obtaining property by false pretenses need not allege specifically that prosecutor suffered loss by reason of the false pretense,⁴¹ except when, as under a few statutes, actual loss is an element of the offense;⁴² but it must set forth

Not a constituent element

The value of property obtained is not constituent element of felony of swindling, but merely controls punishment which may be inflicted. Tex.—Burek v. State, 106 S.W.2d 709, 132 Tex.Cr. 628.

Obtaining a deed

(1) Indictment charging obtaining of deed by swindling, merely stating value of land, without averring value of deed, has been held fatally defective.

(2) However, an indictment for obtaining a deed by false pretenses, which alleges the value of the land conveyed by the deed, but not the value of the deed itself, was held sufficient under a statute making it larceny to obtain the signature to a written instrument by false pretenses, since to hold that the value of the writing is limited to its intrinsic value, apart from the land conveyed, would be to nullify the statute.

Ark.—State v. Bond, 235 S.W. 801, 151 Ark. 203.

Note or check, etc.

various kinds of choses in action are made the subject of larceny, and the money due thereon shall be deemed prima facie evidence of the value of the article so stolen, in an indictment for obtaining a draft for a specified amount by false pretenses, it was unnecessary to aver that the draft was a thing of value.

facts sufficient to show that he suffered a legal injury, as that term is understood in the law of false pretense, or else it fails to charge an offense.⁴³

It should appear, in an indictment for obtaining a signature to an instrument, that such instrument is one which might work injury to the person signing it.⁴⁴ An indictment for fraudulently procuring advances other than money on a contract of labor should contain an allegation that accused did not return the things so advanced or pay for them.⁴⁵

§ 46. — False Personation of Officer or Another Person

General rules apply to indictments or informations for obtaining property by false personation of an officer or another person.

The general rules stated supra §§ 39-45 apply to indictments or informations for obtaining property by false personation of an officer or another person.⁴⁶ An indictment charging accused with false personation of an officer of a department or agency of the government with intent to defraud has been held sufficient regardless of whether there was such

Matters not in issue need not be alleged or proved; but the proof must correspond with, and support, the material averments of the indictment.

Matters which are not in issue, within the scope of the indictment, need not be alleged or proved;^{59,50} but in accordance with general rules, the proof must correspond with, and support, the material averments of the indictment or information,⁶⁰ and an

Issues stated

In prosecution of subcontractor who had falsely assured contractor that no bills for labor or materials were outstanding, and who had thereupon been given a check in full settlement, whether subcontractor, by false statements, obtained contractor's signature to check, whether at time of making such statements he knew they were false, and whether by virtue of such representations, if false, he obtained certain sum on check, were the issues in the case.

Matters to be proved

(1) In prosecution for swindling by use of a bad check, proof should be made as to whether there were sufficient funds in the bank to have paid the check at the time it was passed.

indictment is not supported by proof of a different offense.⁶¹ An allegation which is not descriptive of the offense need not be proved, but may be rejected as surplusage;⁶² but a descriptive allegation, although unnecessarily particular, must be proved as laid.⁶³ Where obtaining property by false pretenses is by statute a larceny, evidence disclosing that the property was obtained by false pretense with intent to defraud is admissible under a count for simple larceny;⁶⁴ but an indictment charging that accused "unlawfully and feloniously did steal, take and carry away" the property described is not sustained by proof that accused obtained possession of the property by false and fraudulent representations.⁶⁵ Evidence as to collateral matters is admissible, although not alleged.⁶⁶

Fatal variance. A material variance between allegations and proof is fatal.^{66.5} A variance between the indictment and proof is not fatal where it is not material to the merits of the case or prejudicial to the defense.⁶⁷

b. Pretense and Intent

The proof must correspond with, and support, the

Tex.—Howk v. State, 135 S.W.2d 719, 138 Tex.Cr. 275.

(2) In statute making it a felony to obtain money or property "by means or use of any false or bogus checks," quoted phrase is descriptive of the offense and describes an essential element of the offense which state must allege and prove. Okl.—Simpson v. State, Cr., 267 P.2d 1008.

(3) In criminal prosecution under statute providing that the making, uttering, and issuing and delivering of worthless check shall be a crime, the state must prove that the maker of the check had neither sufficient funds on deposit in, nor credit with, the bank on which the check was drawn, to pay it on presentation. Ky.—Daily v. Commonwealth, 248 S.W.2d 425.

N.C.—State v. Jackson, 90 S.E.2d 507, 243 N.C. 216.

(4) It is necessary, in charging offense of obtaining money or other thing of value under false pretense, to prove a false representation of a material existing fact, a denial of the truth of the representation, to whom made, knowledge of its falsity, intent to defraud, reliance by victim or victims on false representation, that victim or victims were deceived, to whom money or other thing of value belonged, and surrender thereof to accused because of false representation.

(5) To support a conviction for obtaining money or property by false pretenses, state must adduce competent evidence to effect that the owner relied on such representations believing them to be true, and was induced thereby to part with his money or property.

Neb.—Beyl v. State, 85 N.W.2d 653, 165 Neb. 260.

(6) Where it was neither alleged in indictment or proved at trial that accused had obtained money, property, or anything whatsoever within the false pretenses statute, no offense was charged under statute, and accused could not have been convicted of an attempt to commit such offense.

N.H.—State v. Ellsworth, 124 A.2d 203, 100 N.H. 301.

(7) Where complaint and information, in prosecution for violation of the "hot check" law, charged presentation of the check to a bank, state was required to prove such presentation and could not rely on the statutory presumption for proof of presentation.

Tex.—Colin v. State, 168 S.W.2d 500, 145 Tex.Cr. 371.

No variance

(1) In prosecution for obtaining money by means of a bogus check, fact that proof showed that accused indorsed the check, whereas no indorsement was alleged in information, would not be a variance.

Mo.—State v. Polakoff, 237 S.W.2d 173, 361 Mo. 929.

Particular matters

(1) In an indictment for obtaining an automobile by false pretenses, the state must show the pretense.
 Tex.—McIlvain v. State, 239 S.W. 959, 91 Tex.Cr. 443.

(2) An indictment alleging that accused obtained property by giving a worthless check, knowing that he did not have sufficient funds or credit with the bank to pay it, is not supported by proof that the check was drawn by another person.
 N.C.—State v. Dowless, 9 S.E.2d 18, 217 N.C. 589.
 Tex.—James v. State, 257 S.W. 886, 96 Tex.Cr. 308.

(3) Where swindling indictment averred that draft was drawn by defendant on his father, and on bank, and that payment was refused, failure to prove that defendant's father refused to pay draft was held fatal to conviction.
 Tex.—Boone v. State, 61 S.W.2d 103, 124 Tex.Cr. 174.

(4) Where information charged that defendant gave a check as guardian without sufficient funds, and proof merely showed that she had no funds in her personal account, and that payment of check as guardian was refused for different reason, it was held that there was a variance.
 Tex.—Clark v. State, 277 S.W. 132, 102 Tex.Cr. 88.

(5) Where an information charged defendant with obtaining money from A by making, uttering, and delivering to her a draft on a non-existent drawee, evidence that he procured A to indorse the draft and that he then obtained the money from a bank in which she had no account and which was not then charged to A, although she later repaid the bank, was a fatal variance.
 Ariz.—Patterson v. State, 215 P. 1096, 25 Ariz. 276, 35 A.L.R. 366.

(6) Conviction of giving worthless check was unauthorized on evidence that check indictment mentioned was one given state's witness.
 N.C.—State v. Franklin, 167 S.E. 569, 204 N.C. 157.

(7) Proof that defendant stated that he owned land was held insufficient to sustain charge of false pretenses in representing himself as owner of record title.
 Neb.—Graf v. State, 225 N.W. 466, 118 Neb. 485.

(8) Where there was no allegation that defendant represented property to be free from encumbrance, evidence that the property was encumbered has been held not admissible.

 Ind.—Pontarelli v. State, 176 N.E. 696, 203 Ind. 146.

(3) In prosecution for misdemeanor swindling, for obtaining money by executing check drawn on bank in which defendant had no funds, check was properly introduced in evidence, and testimony of prosecuting witness that defendant executed and delivered check to her did not result in variance, where check was payable to "O. K. Restaurant or bearer," and information alleged that it was delivered to prosecuting witness, but did not allege that it was payable to her.
 Tex.—Harlin v. State, 272 S.W. 448, 100 Tex.Cr. 156.

(4) In a prosecution for fraudulently obtaining goods in which accusation recited that defendant mortgaged to seller of goods and created a lien thereon, admission in evidence of a written instrument promising payment for the goods sold and reciting reservation of title as to such goods and mortgage on other property was not error as constituting a variance because the accusation contained no allegation of reservation of title.

Ga.—Taylor v. State, 105 S.E. 651, 26 Ga.App. 74.

(5) Evidence of accused's false statements regarding details of negotiations she was charged with having represented herself as making was held properly admitted as proof of allegations in indictment.

N.J.—State v. Bennett, 138 A. 923, 104 N.J.Law 186.

(6) In prosecution for false pretense testimony showing defendant's representation that check was valid was held admissible under allegation that check was false.

Variances held immaterial

(1) In prosecution for uttering worthless check, proof that check was drawn on "First National Bank of Ocilla" was held not "substantial variance" from allegation of indictment that check was headed "Ocilla, Ga.," and drawn on "First National Bank."

Ga.—Dixon v. State, 176 S.E. 893, 50 Ga.App. 73.

(2) In a prosecution for passing a false or worthless check, a variance between the date line of the check as set out in the indictment and as offered in evidence has been held immaterial.

Accused cannot be convicted on proof of pretenses not alleged in the indictment,⁷¹ and, if the indictment alleges a single representation made of a single inseparable fact, and the proof is of a single representation variant from that charged, the variance is fatal;⁷² but, where the pretense is charged as a single pretense, proof of a double and separable representation, one part of which alone might constitute this element of the offense and which corresponds with the pretense charged, is no variance.⁷³

The prosecution is not precluded from showing the falsity of any or all of the pretenses alleged,⁷⁴ provided the truth thereof is negated in the indictment.⁷⁵ There is no variance when several representations are alleged and only one is proved, where such pretense was a material inducement to the prosecutor's parting with his property.⁷⁶ However, the allegation as to the pretense which was relied on must be proved as laid, a variance in this respect being fatal.⁷⁷

Where a statute sets out different methods of obtaining money or property with intent to cheat and defraud and makes the use of each method an offense, only one method need be charged, but the particular method used and charged in the information must be proved.^{77.5}

Where the main pretense is charged, evidence is admissible of minor pretenses which may have exercised some influence in producing the result,⁷⁸ and proof of other concurring causes does not constitute a fatal variance.⁷⁹

Time of pretense. The date on which the pretense was made being immaterial, a variance as to the date is not fatal.⁸⁰

Intent. In accordance with general rules as to intent, discussed supra § 7, proof of an intent to defraud may be required,^{80.5} although it need not be proved that the intent was to defraud the particular person named in the indictment.⁸¹ Where, how-

Written statement of financial standing

Where, in a prosecution for swindling W out of an automobile, based on false statements made by accused as to his financial standing when he bought the car, by giving a worthless check and executing notes, the indictment did not set out the written financial statement signed by accused, or allege that W relied on it when he sold the car, admission in evidence of such written statement was held reversible error, as constituting a variance.

Variance not fatal

Where information charged that defendant issued worthless check with intent to cheat and defraud a certain person and a bank, proof that check was cashed at a hotel was not a fatal variance, where cashier at hotel was person named in information as one whom defendant intended to cheat and defraud, and trans-ever, an allegation of intent is not required in a prosecution for an attempt to defraud, it is not necessary to prove any intent.⁸²

c. Property Obtained

The proof must correspond with the allegations as to the property obtained; under most authorities, an averment of obtaining a certain sum of money is sustained by proof of obtaining a check, draft, etc., which is afterward paid or honored.

The allegata and probata as to the property obtained must correspond;⁸³ but an immaterial variance will not be fatal.⁸⁴ In general, it is not necessary to prove that the amount of money obtained was precisely the same as that alleged in the indictment,⁸⁵ and proof that some definite portion of the goods was obtained by means of the alleged false pretense is sufficient.⁸⁶

Proof of the obtaining of a smaller sum of money, or a smaller quantity of property than that alleged, is not a fatal variance,⁸⁷ and, if the proof shows that accused obtained the property alleged, proof that he also obtained other property not alleged is not a variance.⁸⁸ While evidence of the value of property has been held necessary, at least to sustain a felony conviction,⁸⁹ where the jury and the action was set forth in such manner as sufficiently to inform defendant of charges to enable him to present any defense and by proper plea defend himself from subsequent prosecution for same offense.

Money or signature

Under Code 1907 §§ 6920, 6921, the offenses of obtaining money by false pretenses and of obtaining the signature to written instrument by false pretenses are separate and distinct, and proof of the latter will not warrant conviction under count charging the former.

Ala.—Pollock v. State, 97 So. 237, 19 Ala.App. 156, certiorari denied Ex parte State, 97 So. 240, 210 Ala. 69.

Description of money

(1) In Arkansas, proof is unnecessary whether "lawful money of the United States," within indictment for false pretenses, was gold, silver, or paper.

Ark.—Spears v. State, 294 S.W. 66, 173 Ark. 1071.

(2) However, in earlier cases it was held that, under an indictment charging defendant with having procured by false pretenses "$300 in gold, silver, and paper money, of the value of $300," the ownership and description of the money alleged to have been obtained were material allegations of the indictment, which must be proved before defendant could be convicted, and the court should have so charged.

(2) Where indictment alleged that defendant fraudulently obtained a specified automobile by issuance of a bad check and proof showed that he obtained a different automobile, the variance between the indictment and proof justified reversal of a conviction since a conviction under the indictment would afford defendant no protection in a later prosecution for obtaining the alleged automobile on the faith of the bad check.

Tenn.—Malkemus v. State, 129 S.W.2d 201, 174 Tenn. 547.

No variance

Where a bogus bond is presented to an agent of the state authorized to act in the premises for payment or refunding, by a letter of transmittal, there is no variance because the letter refers to a territorial bond and the bond in question was a county indebtedness which the state had assumed, in the prosecution.

N.M.—State v. Kelly, 202 P. 524, 27 N.M. 412, 21 A.L.R. 156.

Evidence admissible

In a prosecution for swindling by obtaining drafts by false pretenses, if it became necessary, in order to sustain the allegation of value of the drafts, to prove their execution by a bank or some person having authority from it, such proof was admissible under the general allegation of value of the instruments in the indictments.

Value and denomination

In prosecution for grand theft accomplished by obtaining three hundred dollars in money as a purported loan, by means of false representations, it was not necessary to prove specifically that the loan of three hundred dollars "in money" was actually worth that sum, nor was it necessary to prove that it was paid in coin or currency or what the denomination of the separate pieces of money was.

trial court knew that the value of the property obtained was sufficient to constitute the offense a felony, formal evidence of the value of the property has been held not necessary.⁹⁰

According to a number of decisions, an averment of obtaining a certain sum of money is sustained by proof of obtaining a check, draft, warrant, order, or the like, which is afterward paid or honored;⁹¹ but there is authority to the contrary.⁹² Also, it has been held that there is a fatal variance where the indictment charges accused with obtaining money by false pretenses and the proof is that he obtained a note,⁹³ or the satisfaction of a debt,⁹⁴ but that proof that a draft, by which accused secured other drafts and a deposit credit, was obtained is not at fatal variance with an indictment alleging that accused obtained "current and genuine money."⁹⁵

d. Person to Whom Pretense Was Made

Allegation and proof as to the person to whom the false pretense was made must correspond.

The proof as to the person to whom the false pretense was made must correspond with the allegation in the indictment;⁹⁶ but since pretenses may be indirectly made, there is no variance between an allegation that the pretenses were made to a person named and proof that they were made to another person and by him communicated to the person named,⁹⁷ or where the representations were made to a third person, but in the presence of the prosecutor who acted on them.⁹⁸ If the allegation is that the false pretense was made to several persons, there is a variance in proof that it was made to one of the persons named.⁹⁹

The allegations and proof as to the person from whom the property was obtained must correspond.

The proof must correspond to the allegations of the indictment as to the person from whom the property was obtained.¹ However, while there is authority to the contrary,² it has been held that there is no variance where it is alleged that the property was obtained from a certain person and the proof shows that it was delivered to accused by the agent

Obtaining credit by bank

(1) It has been held that proof that the amount of a check was passed to the credit of accused by bank and drawn on by him in favor of other parties will not sustain an indictment for obtaining money.

Obviating variance

A variance between information charging that accused obtained possession of property from owner and delivered bad check to owner, and proof that accused obtained possession of property from owner's father and delivered check to father, could be obviated by charging that father acted as agent for owner, which fact was well-known to accused, and that check was made payable to owner but delivered to owner's father as agent.

Tex.—Nichols v. State, supra.

of such person or by some third person on his request or order.³

Under a statute requiring that the property be obtained from any person, firm, or corporation, an information charging that accused obtained property from the prosecuting witness has been held not at variance with proof that the property belonged to someone other than the prosecuting witness.^{3.5}

f. Person Obtaining Property

Ordinarily, proof that the property was received by a third person will not support an averment that accused obtained it.

Where it is charged that accused obtained certain property, proof that it was received by a third person will not suffice.⁴ However, the fact that the proof shows that accused never obtained the property, but that it was obtained, if at all, by a company for which he acted as agent, does not constitute a fatal variance;⁵ nor does proof that the property was delivered to another at accused's request, or in accordance with his wishes, constitute a material variance.⁶

g. Ownership of Property Obtained

While a material variance as to the title or ownership of the property obtained is fatal, proof of the actual or constructive possession of the property by the one alleged to be the owner has been held sufficient.

A material variance between the indictment and proof as to the title or ownership of the property obtained is fatal.⁷ Proof of the actual or construc-

Tex.—McIlvain v. State, 239 S.W. 959, 91 Tex.Cr. 443.

Payment to partnership

(1) An information charging that defendant and another conspired to obtain money by false pretenses does not authorize a conviction on the theory that, although the money was paid by the prosecuting witness to a partnership of which he became a member, the partnership was merely an artifice or scheme to defraud the prosecuting witness and the money was converted by defendant to his own use where the information did not so charge.

Mo.—State v. Smalley, 252 S.W. 443.

Allegation as surplusage

Under a statute providing that an indictment for obtaining goods by false pretenses need not allege the ownership of the goods, the allegation of ownership in an indictment is mere surplusage, which need not be proved.

N.C.—State v. Ridge, 34 S.E. 440, 125 N.C. 658.

Name by which usually known

It has been held sufficient to prove that the person is known by the name alleged, although such name is not his true name.

Ill.—People v. Marek, 156 N.E. 772, 326 Ill. 11.

Christian name unknown

Where the evidence before the grand jury did not show the Christian name of one of the parties defrauded, the mere fact that such party testified on the trial of defendant for obtaining money under false pretenses, giving his full name, did not establish that his Christian name was not unknown to the grand jury using his initials in the indictment, so as to constitute a fatal variance. Ind.—Small v. State, 130 N.E. 401, 190 Ind. 406.

Corporation or partnership

(1) Where count in swindling prosecution averred that individual was owner of, and parted with, title to, and possession of, check, proof showing that individual acted merely as agent for corporation constituted fatal variance.

Tex.—Brown v. State, 44 S.W.2d 721, 119 Tex.Cr. 578.

(2) When the indictment in a prosecution for obtaining money or goods under false pretenses charges that a particular person named was the owner of the money or goods obtained, and the proof shows that it was obtained from a firm composed of two or more persons, the variance is fatal.

Miss.—Pippin v. State, 88 So. 502, 126 Miss. 146.

(3) However, where it is not necessary that the indictment allege that the owner of the property obtained is a corporation or partnership, supra § 42 b, an indictment for false pretenses was held not bad, because it described the injured party as "C. & Co.," without alleging whether it was a corporation or a partnership, and without giving the names of the partners, and there was no variance, although the proof showed that such company was a partnership.

Ky.—McClanahan v. Commonwealth, 247 S.W. 369, 197 Ky. 457.

Immaterial variance

Wife's interest in community property, consisting of a bank account in the name of herself and husband, against which each was authorized to check, was such as to support a criminal charge of obtaining it from her by false representations, constituting grand larceny.

Wash.—State v. Cook, 194 P. 401, 115 Wash. 391.

tive possession of the property by the one alleged in the indictment to be the owner thereof has been held sufficient;⁸ and a variance as to the ownership of the property obtained has been held not fatal where it is not material to the merits of the case or prejudicial to the defense,⁹ as where the offense was sufficiently described in other respects to identify the act.¹⁰

Under an indictment for obtaining property by means of the confidence game, it is sufficient to allege that the property obtained was either that of the general owner or his agent in possession of it and to prove that the confidence game was practiced either on the owner or the agent.¹¹ However, a failure to prove the name of the injured person as alleged in the indictment, or a name idem sonans, is not a mere variance, but is a fatal lack of evidence to prove the crime charged.¹²

B. EVIDENCE

§ 50. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

The burden rests on the prosecution to prove beyond a reasonable doubt every essential element of the crime charged, except in so far as express statutory provisions have created presumptions as to the existence of specified elements, such as the intent to defraud, from proof of enumerated facts. The accused has the burden of proving affirmative matters of defense.

Technical ownership immaterial

The technical ownership of the money paid out by a bank on a check drawn on another bank is not material; hence there is no variance between an information charging that payee was defrauded and proof that the money was that of the collecting bank, particularly where the proof also showed that the payee was compelled to repay the money to the bank.

Wash.—State v. Pilling, 102 P. 230, 53 Wash. 464, 132 Am.S.R. 1080.

Community property

In prosecution under charge that accused defrauded store clerk, where testimony of prosecution showed that clerk was married and living with husband and that both owned the store, property obtained by accused was community property with ownership in husband, and conviction would be reversed for failure of proof to correspond to allegations.

W.Va.—State v. Cobb, 7 S.E.2d 443, 122 W.Va. 97.

Custody or possession

Fatal variance existed between indictment charging that accused obtained property of hotel clerk through presentation of counterfeit check, and proof that accused obtained hotel's money from the clerk to whom the check was presented, since clerk had mere "custody" of money of the hotel which retained "possession" thereof.

Part owner

Judgment of conviction for receiving money by means of a confidence game would not be reversed because defendant was indicted for obtaining money of the prosecuting witness in the sum of two thousand eight hundred dollars when the proof showed that only two thousand dollars of the money belonged to the prosecuting witness and eight hundred dollars to his wife, since, if money is obtained by means of a confidence game, the offense is complete without reference to the amount, kind, or value.

Burden never shifts

The burden of establishing the Conformably to the rule applicable in criminal prosecutions generally, discussed in Criminal Law § 566, in a prosecution for false pretenses the burden rests on the state¹³ to prove beyond a reasonable doubt¹⁴ every essential element of the crime charged.¹⁵ It must prove that the alleged reprefacts necessary to a conviction beyond a reasonable doubt remains with the commonwealth throughout the trial and never shifts to accused. Ky.—Commonwealth v. Gentry, 88 S. W.2d 273, 261 Ky. 564.

Although statute makes delivery of check without sufficient funds prima facie evidence of intent to defraud, such prima facie evidence does not take from state burden of proving guilt beyond reasonable doubt.

Matter to be proved in prosecution for obtaining property by false pretenses generally

(1) That the crime charged was committed by accused.

La.—State v. Hart, 196 So. 62, 195 La. 184, followed in State v. Weiss, 196 So. 70, 195 La. 208.

Tex.—Phillips v. State, 297 S.W.2d 134, 164 Tex.Cr. 78.

(2) That the crime was committed in the parish where the venue was laid.

La.—State v. Hart, 196 So. 62, 195 La. 184, followed in State v. Weiss, 196 So. 70, 195 La. 208.

(3) That person defrauded intend-sensation or pretense was made,¹⁶ that it was false,¹⁷ | that accused knew it to be false,¹⁸ that the person ed to pass title to accused at time he obtained the property.

Iowa.—State v. Evans, 295 N.W. 433, 229 Iowa 932.

(4) Absence of indebtedness between employer and employee, in prosecution of employee, who received and cashed check from employer, for obtaining money under false pretenses, where representation of existing indebtedness between employer and employee could have been implied.

Utah.—State v. Timmerman, 55 P.2d 1320, 56 P.2d 1354, 88 Utah 481.

Matters to be proved in prosecution for issuing bad check

(1) All essential elements of offense.

(3) That accused gave the check for something of value.

Fla.—Grantham v. State, 90 So. 697, 83 Fla. 16.

(4) That accused failed to make restitution or pay the money within twenty-four hours after notice had been brought to him of the refusal of the bank to pay the check.

Fla.—Grantham v. State, supra.

(5) That husband of accused was insane when checks were issued.

Cal.—People v. Monks, 24 P.2d 508, 133 C.A. 440.

(6) Where lack of arrangement, understanding or funds to meet the check was sufficiently shown, proof of presentment and protest was not necessary.

Iowa.—State v. Doudna, 284 N.W. 113, 226 Iowa 351.

(7) State must prove that accused did not have sufficient funds on deposit with bank to pay check, drawn by him against his account therein, when it should have reached bank through ordinary channels, regardless of how many checks were drawn and paid since such check was given.

Tex.—Kuykendall v. State, 160 S.W. 2d 525, 143 Tex.Cr. 607.

In prosecution for uttering draft without funds

(1) The state had burden of proving that, prior to or at time accused executed draft in payment for cattle, accused had not made arrangements for its payment if presented within a reasonable time to person on whom it was drawn.

Ga.—Spivey v. State, 8 S.E.2d 677, 62 Ga.App. 507.

(2) State had burden to support allegation that accused drawing draft on his father and on bank had no good reason to believe father would pay draft when presented.

Tex.—Boone v. State, 61 S.W.2d 103, 124 Tex.Cr. 174.

(3) State, alleging that payment of draft accused drew on his father and bank was refused, had duty to prove both father and bank refused payment of draft when presented.

Tex.—Boone v. State, supra.

Matters to be proved in prosecution for swindling

(1) In prosecution for cheating and swindling by false representation that realty mortgaged was free from encumbrances, burden is on state, not only to establish misrepresentation made and credit given, but likewise a loss by mortgagee.

Ga.—Daniel v. State, 10 S.E.2d 80, 63 Ga.App. 12.

(2) In prosecution for cheating and swindling by false representations that personalty mortgaged was free from encumbrances, state was not required to prove extent of damage to persons swindled.

Ga.—Bolton v. State, 159 S.E. 910, 43 Ga.App. 759—Tribble v. State, 126 S.E. 272, 33 Ga.App. 370.

Proof of value of money not required

When object of misrepresentations is to acquire money, presumption will be indulged that by term "money" is meant United States money and no proof of the value of the money is required further than to designate the sum in dollars and cents.

Tex.—Raymond v. State, 33 S.W.2d 192, 116 Tex.Cr. 595.

Value of deed

Under indictment alleging that accused and his co-principal, by means of false pretenses and devices and fraudulent representations, knowingly and fraudulently made by them to certain persons, did acquire from them a certain mineral deed which was of the value of five hundred dollars, burden was on the state to show that instrument was of the value of fifty dollars or more.

Absence of alternative hypothesis

In prosecution against trustee for building and loan association for overstating to Home Owners' Loan Corporation amounts due on mortgages which corporation was asked to take over, government was required to prove beyond reasonable doubt that mortgagors' separate stock and budget accounts should have been applied to reduction of mortgage debt and that there was no other reasonable hypothesis on which trustee might have based contention that accounts were not so applicable at time statements were made.

U.S.—U. S. v. Clawson, D.C.Wyo., 13 F.Supp. 178.

Matters which must be proved

(1) Where information charged that accused told complaining witness that it was necessary for him to give accused thirty-five dollars to pay for deed and abstract to lots which complaining witness purportedly won, where accused had performed all conditions required of him by memorandum of lot sale given to complaining witness and signed by both parties, burden of proof was on state to establish lack of necessity to expend thirty-five dollars.

defrauded relied on the truth of the pretense and that it induced him to part with his property,¹⁹ and that the purpose to defraud was accomplished.²⁰

The prosecution is not, however, required to prove elements not specifically included within the definition of the offense.²¹ On a prosecution for selling land without having title thereto, the state must prove want of title in accused to the property conveyed;²² but in a prosecution for obtaining property by a false pretense of ownership of land it is not necessary for the prosecution to prove, as in larceny, title in another to land which accused falsely represented he owned, it being sufficient if the evidence establishes that accused had no title himself.²³ If the information charges two separate things, first, that accused did not own the land to which he gave deed, and, second, that he had no authority from the owner to convey it, it is accused's duty to present evidence in support of his contention that he was authorized to convey.²⁴

The court will indulge in appropriate presumptions or inferences arising from the facts which have been proved.^{24.5}

Intent. The burden is on the state to prove a fraudulent intent on the part of accused.²⁵ As a general rule such intent must be specifically proved,²⁶ but specific proof has also been held not required.²⁷ Such intent is not an inference of law and will not be presumed;²⁸ it cannot be implied from the fact that the pretense alleged was made,²⁹ that it was false,³⁰ and that accused knew it to be false;³¹ nor will the court hold that if certain facts be proved they constitute an intent to defraud.³²

Burden of proof unchanged

Under statutes penalizing the making or issuing of check without sufficient funds with intent to defraud and making delivery of check without sufficient funds to meet it prima facie evidence of intent to defraud, the burden is on the state to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that those accused entertained a criminal intent to defraud, in spite of statutory presumptions.

N.J.—State v. Riccardo, 107 A.2d 807, 32 N.J.Super. 89.

Prima facie case

(1) Refusal of drawee bank to pay check on account of insufficient funds is prima facie evidence of intent to defraud.

Ala.—Holloway v. State, 88 So.2d 700, 38 Ala.App. 501—Padgett v. State, 131 So. 3, 24 Ala.App. 133.

(2) Where president of corporation, in his capacity as president, on November 3, executed a check, which was dated November 5, and at time check and his failure to pay it within a specified time after he has been given notice of its nonpayment,³⁵ which notice must, in some states, be written notice,³⁶ is prima facie evidence of intent to defraud. Under some statutes the intent to defraud cannot be presumed until it is shown by the evidence that accused did not have sufficient funds in, or credit with, the bank on which the check was drawn to pay it at the time it was presented for payment.^{36.5} Before a presumption of intent may be invoked from the prima facie evidence it must appear that the check was the inducing cause for parting with money or property.^{36.10}

Such evidence, or the presumption arising therefrom, is rebuttable,³⁷ the burden of doing so being on accused,^{37.5} and is overcome by proof in the defense of a lack of intent to defraud.³⁸ If evidence of intent to defraud is rebutted,³⁹ or if no prima facie case arose because the check was never presented to the bank and payment refused,^{39.5} or because of the failure to give accused the required notice of the check's dishonor,⁴⁰ it is necessary for

of delivery of check, neither president nor corporation had any funds in drawee bank, and never had any funds therein, and made no deposit in bank prior to date of check, there was prima facie evidence of fraud within meaning of statute making it an offense to draw check or draft without credit and with intent to defraud.

Ohio.—State v. De Nicola, 126 N.E.2d 62, 163 Ohio St. 140.

(3) Under statute providing that delivery of a check which is dishonored because of insufficient funds shall be prima facie evidence of intent to defraud and of knowledge of insufficient funds, fact that there is no formal protest does not destroy effectiveness of statute.

Va.—Cook v. Commonwealth, 16 S.E. 2d 635, 178 Va. 251.

Prima facie case

(1) Provision in bad check statute, that failure of person drawing check to pay or have paid amount of it within ten days after notification of nonpayment on presentation shall be prima facie evidence of obtaining amount thereof under false pretenses, is mere rule of evidence, not conclusive of guilt, and does not constitute definition of offense.

Miss.—McBride v. State, 104 So. 454, 141 Miss. 186.

(2) The giving of a check, which is not paid on account of insufficient funds, is prima facie evidence of intent.

Okl.—Loughridge v. State, 72 P.2d 513, 63 Okl.Cr. 33.

(3) The indorsement of a check by drawee "insufficient funds" is "prima facie evidence" of intent by drawer to defraud, provided drawer does not pay drawee amount of check with protest fees within five days from date of presentment thereof for payment, and such presentment is made within thirty days from date of delivery of check.

Payment

(1) That payee of check agreed to accept weekly payments, and gave credit for such payments before giving written notice of dishonor, did not vitiate the prima facie presumption of fraudulent intent.

Va.—Cook v. Commonwealth, 16 S.E. 2d 635, 178 Va. 251.

(2) Note is not "payment" within meaning of statute relating to presumption from uttering bad checks. N.J.—State v. Parsons, 140 A. 13, 6 N.J.Misc. 76, affirmed 142 A. 918, 105 N.J.Law 253.

(3) Payment totaling twenty-two dollars on a check for five hundred eighty-eight dollars and eighty cents was not payment of the "amount due thereon" within meaning of statute providing for prima facie evidence of intent to defraud unless such payment be made.

How rebutted

(1) While Ky.St. § 1213a makes uttering of check without funds to cover prima facie evidence of intent to defraud, such prima facie case may be rebutted by facts and circumstances.

Va.—Turner v. Brenner, 121 S.E. 510, 138 Va. 232.

(4) In prosecution for checking on bank with insufficient funds or credit, evidence that bank had previously permitted accused to overdraw his bank account was insufficient to destroy or rebut prima facie showing made by state of his intent to defraud and knowledge of insufficient funds or credit because of his failure to pay check within five days after notice of dishonor where another check drawn payable to same individual at same time was also subsequently dishonored.

the prosecution to prove affirmatively, by independent evidence, accused's intent to defraud.

Knowledge of insufficient funds to meet check. In a prosecution for issuing checks without sufficient funds or credit to cover them the unpaid checks, with the protests, may, under the statute, constitute presumptive evidence of accused's knowledge of the insufficiency of funds or credit with the bank on which they were drawn;⁴¹ and he is presumed to know that checks issued by him without sufficient funds will be returned unpaid.⁴²

Motive. The state is not required to prove the motive, if any, which induced the commission of the offense.⁴³

Matters of defense. The burden is on accused to prove matters of defense,⁴⁴ and to overcome a prima facie case that a check which he obtained by false pretenses was paid,⁴⁵ or, where the state proves facts which raise a presumption that a check issued by accused without funds was with intent to defraud, the burden is then on accused to prove that it was not issued with intent to defraud.⁴⁶ Where a false belief was created in the mind of a person defrauded by accused the burden is on accused to show that such false belief was removed, or it will be presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, to have influenced the actions of the person defrauded in his subsequent dealings with accused.⁴⁷

§ 51. Admissibility

- a. In general
- b. As to falsity of pretense
- c. As to knowledge and intent
- d. As to reliance on pretense

a. In General

In accordance with the general rules as to relevancy, competency, and materiality of evidence in criminal cases generally, any evidence which tends to prove or disprove any element of the crime is admissible.

Subject to the general rules governing the admissibility of evidence in criminal cases, discussed in Criminal Law §§ 600-899, on a trial for obtaining property by false pretense, and analogous offenses, any competent and material evidence which tends to prove any element of the crime is admissible on the part of the prosecution.⁴⁸ Likewise, and with the

Proof of notice not essential element

Statute providing that failure of maker or drawer to pay check within five days after notice that check has been dishonored shall be prima facie evidence of intent to defraud and of knowledge of insufficient funds in, or credit with, bank or other depository is rule of evidence, and proof of giving such notice is not an essential element of offense of checking on bank with insufficient funds or credit, but failure to give notice would merely prohibit state from availing itself of presumption created by statute, and payment by maker or drawer within five days would only abrogate presumption and would not be a defense to charge.

Affirmative defense

In prosecution for knowingly issuing a check without sufficient funds, that accused had an arrangement with brother for checking on brother's account was an affirmative defense, which accused had the burden of proving.

Kan.—State v. Ferris, 84 P.2d 949, 148 Kan. 663.

Failure to give notice of dishonor

In a prosecution for giving a bad check under a statute which excepts from its operation persons who, when notified that their check was not paid, immediately make a deposit to cover it, facts bringing accused within the exception are matters of defense, so that, when the state has made a prima facie case by proving that a check drawn by accused was not paid, the burden is on accused to show that no notice was given him so that he might make a deposit to cover it.

Condition of property after misrepresentation

Cal.—People v. Currie, 39 P.2d 215, 3 C.A.2d 31.

Suppression of facts

In prosecution for false pretenses, suppression by accused of fact material to transaction is proper subject of proof.

Cal.—People v. Gordon, 163 P.2d 110, 71 C.A.2d 606.

Evidence held admissible

(1) Testimony of chairman of investigation committee that records failed to show corporation received proceeds of stock was relevant to prove falsity of representations of stock salesman.

Md.—Summons v. State, 144 A. 497, 156 Md. 382.

(2) Testimony of witness having charge of records that accused was not employed by: certain employer was admissible to prove falsity of representation he was.

Idaho.—State v. Stevens, 282 P. 93, 48 Idaho 335.

(3) Testimony regarding mining activities in vicinity of C was admissible on issue of falsity of accused's representation regarding opening mine around C.

Idaho.—State v. Stevens, supra.

(4) Testimony of witnesses that accused had treated them for physical ills, and they had not benefited thereby, was admissible on issue of falsity of his representations that he was a divine healer.

Cal.—People v. Walker, 231 P. 572, 69 C.A. 475.

(5) In prosecution for obtaining a school district warrant by false pretenses by president of board of education, who had handled finances of school district, admission in evidence of testimony of certified public accountant concerning amounts paid out on account of bonds, notes, and interest, and amount which had become due and payable during such period, and that there was an excess of payments was proper.

Mo.—State v. Brickey, 152 S.W.2d 1055, 348 Mo. 248.

(6) In prosecution for selling ore taken from abandoned dumps as high grade ore by causing high grade gold and silver ore to be placed in samples, gold and silver content of which formed basis for payment for car-load lots of ore, reports made by accused to treasury department which reports falsely stated that ore was newly mined ore were admissible.

Tex.—West v. State, 145 S.W.2d 580, 140 Tex. Cr. 493.

(7) In prosecution of county officer for collection of false expense accounts, the state could meet the burden imposed on it of proving a negative by showing that trips for which expenses were claimed were not made or, if made, that they were not made on county business, by showing that they were made for other reasons.

Wash.—State v. Dodd, 74 P.2d 497, 193 Wash. 26.

(8) Any evidence to show that a romantic attachment rather than county business prompted the trips on which the purported official expenditures were incurred was admissible in prosecution of officer for collection of false expense accounts.

Wash.—State v. Dodd, supra.

(9) Where accused was charged with having held himself out to the prosecuting witness as secretary of the "Fort Worth Exchange," trial court properly permitted a witness to testify that he was secretary of the "Fort Worth Grain and Cotton Exchange" at the time in question, and that accused was not an employee of such exchange, it being the claim of the state that there was no such institution as the "Fort Worth Exchange," but that it was the purpose of accused to mislead the injured person into believing the former to be a bona fide officer of an exchange in the city of Fort Worth.

Tex.—Gerber v. State, 232 S.W. 334, 90 Tex. Cr. 37.

(10) In prosecution for cheating by fraudulent pretenses, larceny, tenses of ownership of property,⁶³ as to the falsity of pretenses that property is unencumbered,⁶⁴ and as to the falsity of pretenses as to financial condition and ability.⁶⁵ Evidence of the individual indebtedness of the members of a partnership is not admissible to prove that representations as to the solvency of the partnership are false.⁶⁶ On a prosecution for obtaining money by falsely pretending to be the owner of property, the proceedings and judgment in a claim suit interposed in an action against accused are properly excluded as res inter alios acta.⁶⁷

c. As to Knowledge and Intent

Any competent evidence which legitimately tends to prove or disprove knowledge by the accused of the falsity of his representations or an intent to defraud is admissible.

As a general rule any competent evidence which has a legitimate tendency to prove or disprove that accused knew his representations to be false is admissible,⁶⁸ and the same is true of any evidence fraudulent conversion, and embezzlement by agent, commonwealth witness who had dealt with accused in sale of kind of stock which was subject matter of prosecution was properly called to show that he had sold the stock for accused and transmitted the proceeds to accused pursuant to their previous agreement. Pa.—Commonwealth v. Neuman, 30 A.2d 698, 151 Pa.Super. 642.

Evidence held inadmissible

(1) In prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses that defendant was divine healer, evidence that in her absence accused usually allowed her fourteen year old daughter to conduct healing operations was not admissible as tending to show that accused did not possess power of divine healing.

Cal.—People v. Walker, 231 P. 572, 69 C.A. 475.

(2) Evidence of value of leases is not relevant to issue that accused misrepresented price paid therefor. Pa.—Commonwealth v. Forney, 88 Pa. Super. 451.

63. Cal.—People v. Reid, 237 P. 824, 72 C.A. 611.
25 C.J. p 648 note 23.

Evidence held admissible

In prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses that certain check of corporation was not for money due stockholder whose interest in corporation's deposit had been attached, corporation's records showing preliminary distribution to stockholders were admissible to establish falsity of representation.

Md.—Deibert v. State, 133 A. 847, 150 Md. 687.

Property subsequently owned

In prosecution for obtaining loan under false pretense that accused owned and possessed a certain number of hogs, admitting testimony that he had only fifty to seventy-five hogs between certain dates was not erroneous on ground that it related to matters subsequent to giving of chattel mortgage on hogs, where testimony showed that number of hogs possessed by accused was less than number represented. he admitted that he did not have all hogs listed, and other witnesses testified that accused had only fifty to seventy hogs.

Mass.—Commonwealth v. Bannon, 150 N.E. 7, 254 Mass. 320.
25 C.J. p 648 note 24.

Invalid encumbrance

In prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses by inducing buyer of automobile to part with money without disclosing the existence of an encumbrance on automobile, admission in evidence of chattel mortgage purporting to cover automobile was an error fatal to conviction, where mortgage was executed pursuant to power of attorney giving authority to make, draw, sign, or endorse bills of exchange or promissory notes, since that authority did not give authority to sign chattel mortgages.

65. Mich.—People v. Smith, 260 N.W. 911, 271 Mich. 553.
25 C.J. p 648 note 25.

Bank account

(1) In prosecution for passing fictitious check, testimony that check deposited in accused's account was taken for collection only and so did not constitute an amount on deposit to his credit for the purpose of drawing checks is admissible.

Cal.—People v. Bowles, 280 P. 184, 100 C.A. 464.

(2) Evidence showing withdrawal of entire deposit on date worthless check was given was admissible.

Tex.—Brigham v. State, 16 S.W.2d 243, 112 Tex.Cr. 281.

Bankruptcy proceedings

A certified copy of bankruptcy proceedings, showing that the drawer was adjudged an involuntary bankrupt and a receiver appointed after the giving of check not paid on presentation, although not in itself showing that the drawer had enough funds to pay the check, was admissible as tending to corroborate accused's statement that the drawer did have sufficient funds.

Ga.—Oetgen v. State, 107 S.E. 885, 27 Ga.App. 177.

Condition of corporation

In prosecution for false pretenses as to value of stock of corporation which was purported to own pipe line, admission of contract relating to lease of pipes which showed that corporation had no property interest in pipe and that corporation was doing business on shoestring, and comments of prosecuting attorney on contract, held not error.

Mich.—People v. Smith, 260 N.W. 911, 271 Mich. 553.

Financial condition of third person

In prosecution of bank officer, testimony relating to financial responsibility of person whom accused allegedly falsely represented to bank directors as being interested in corporation seeking loan from bank held admissible.

Md.—Delcher v. State, 158 A. 37, 161 Md. 475.

Subsequent statement

Where complaining witness was induced to purchase interest in corporation by means of a written statement, represented as taken from the books of the corporation, a second statement prepared at the instance of the accused, after the purchase by complaining witness, and given to him for the express purpose of showing the assets of the corporation, and which showed such assets to be less than shown in the first statement, was admissible as evidence of the falsity of the first statement.

Grounds for belief

Trial judge, admitting accused's testimony in trial for stealing goods shipped to corporation, that he believed his statements to latter's salesman were true, properly excluded grounds for such belief.

Mass.—Commonwealth v. Levine, 181 N.E. 851, 280 Mass. 83.

Nonpayment of prior checks

(1) In prosecution for issuing worthless checks, where accused claimed to have had a prearranged credit with bank on which checks were drawn, evidence taken from records of bank concerning approximately two hundred forty five of accused's checks which bank had rejected for insufficient funds over a two-year period, and showing that accused had been notified by bank concerning rejection of such checks, was admissible to prove his knowledge that he did not have sufficient credit with bank to meet checks involved in indictment, although the state did not prove that the two hundred forty five checks were written by accused or to whom they were payable or delivered.

Cal.—People v. Megladdery, 105 P.2d 385, 40 C.A.2d 643.

(2) In prosecution for issuing checks without sufficient funds, where charges were based on numerous instances in which checks of accused were returned from various banks for insufficient funds, the different checks were competent to establish his knowledge of lack of sufficient funds.

Cal.—People v. Adams, App., 340 P.2d 677.

Evidence not admissible

In a prosecution for drawing a draft without sufficient funds on deposit to meet it, or reason to believe that it would be paid, evidence of the nonpayment of drafts subsequently drawn by accused and payable to others besides the complaining witness is not admissible, where there is only slight affirmative evidence that accused did not have reason to believe the draft in controversy would be paid.

Financial ability of accused

(1) Evidence of accused's solvency or insolvency and capacity or incapacity of accused or another, on whose credit money is procured, to repay it is ordinarily admissible to prove accused's good or bad faith.

Md.—Simmons v. State, 167 A. 60, 165 Md. 155.

(2) Evidence of accused's assets and liabilities is inadmissible where the representation did not involve his financial ability to pay.

Md.—Simmons v. State, supra.

(3) Under statute prohibiting overdrafts, the essentials of intent to defraud and knowledge of insufficient funds may be shown by refusal of payment by the drawee bank and by failure of drawer to make the check good within ten days after notice.

Ark.—Smith v. State, 174 S.W.2d 555, 206 Ark. 154.

(4) In prosecution for obtaining money through false pretenses, checks which were drawn on bank by accused's employee allegedly acting under his instructions, were cashed at trust company, and the proceeds of which were remitted by employee by wire to accused's account at bank on which checks were drawn, which subsequently dishonored the checks, were admissible as corroborating employee's testimony as to the transaction, and as showing the scheme or plan which accused employed in obtaining the money from the trust company.

Ark.—Mortensen v. State, 217 S.W. 2d 325, 214 Ark. 528.

(5) In prosecution for issuing checks without sufficient funds, where charges were based on numerous instances in which checks of accused were returned from various banks for insufficient funds, the different checks were competent to establish his intent to defraud.

Cal.—People v. Adams, App., 340 P. 2d 677.

(6) In prosecution for grand theft, where intent to defraud was a necessary element of the theft and accused testified that he intended to pay for the merchandise he had obtained on numerous charge accounts, testimony of the inability of accused to make such payments because of his general financial condition was admissible as tending to negative the effect of his denial of any criminal intention.

Cal.—People v. Robertson, App., 334 P.2d 938.

(7) Other cases see 25 C.J. p 649 note 29 [f].

To disprove intent

(1) It is error to exclude evidence negating the existence of a fraudulent intent.

La.—State v. Alphonse, 98 So. 430, 154 La. 950.

(2) Where accused was being prosecuted for issuing check without sufficient funds with intent to defraud, refusal to permit him to testify as to alleged arrangement made with third person on day before issuance of check to deposit money in bank next day to accused's credit was prejudicial error.

Cal.—People v. Gaines, 234 P.2d 702, 106 C.A.2d 176.

(3) In prosecution of contractor for wrongfully obtaining money by false pretense with intent to cheat or defraud in securing payment for work on the representation that work had been completed, evidence of contractor's checks dishonored by bank, admitted for limited purpose of showing contractor's lack of financial responsibility at the time, became competent on issue of intent in light of respondent's evidence that checks were made good, which went beyond limited purpose.

N.H.—State v. Skaff, 54 A.2d 155, 94 N.H. 402.

(4) Under such circumstances, evidence that note was ostensibly drafted for immediate, rather than deferred, discount and that there was a partial performance of contract by respondent after money was paid and before any claim of wrongful conduct was asserted, supported respondent's position that he acted in good faith and was entitled to consideration by jury under appropriate instructions on issue of whether respondent acted with criminal intent.

N.H.—State v. Skaff, supra.

(5) Accused may rebut or controvert evidence tending to establish specific intent, and may introduce other pertinent, independent evidence to establish affirmatively lack of criminal intent.

Cal.—People v. Becker, 30 P.2d 562, 137 C.A. 349.

(6) Accused's evidence that he believed check given would be paid was admissible.

Tex.—Wooten v. State, 4 S.W.2d 563, 109 Tex.Cr. 325.

(7) One charged with violating bad check law may establish that he had sufficient credit with bank to warrant its payment to rebut prima facie evidence of intent to defraud arising from refusal of payment on presentation of check.

Ala.—Bates v. State, 137 So. 465, first case, 24 Ala.App. 507, certiorari denied 137 So. 465, second case, 223 Ala. 527.

(8) In prosecution for issuing bank check with intent to defraud, excluding testimony showing accused made arrangements to obtain money and expected to open account in bank on following business day to cover check was error.

Cal.—People v. Becker, 30 P.2d 562, 137 C.A. 349.

(9) Accused's testimony that he had deposited substantial sums in bank and did not know, but believed, that he had drawn only two small checks was admissible to show absence of fraudulent intent when check was executed and delivered.

Tex.—Freeman v. State, 147 S.W.2d 1095, 141 Tex.Cr. 158.

(10) In prosecution for giving fraudulent check, rejection of accused's evidence that, after drawee bank's refusal to accept his proffered deposit of cashier's check, he deposited it in another bank, was error.

N.Y.—People v. Hasto, 260 N.Y.S. 97, 236 App.Div. 533.

(11) Evidence for accused that he gave another check payable in future, and which was paid, held admissible.

Tex.—Morrow v. State, 31 S.W.2d 636, 116 Tex.Cr. 605.

(12) Testimony that accused, when delivering check, stated that funds were insufficient for payment and that check should not be deposited until further notice is admissible.

N.Y.—People v. Olans, 191 N.E. 494, 264 N.Y. 420.

(13) Testimony that accused tendered payment of check refused payment for insufficient funds before prosecution thereon is admissible.

Tex.—Armstrong v. State, 59 S.W.2d 140, 123 Tex.Cr. 372.

(14) Testimony that bank which refused payment under agreement to limit withdrawals had honored checks exceeding agreed amount was admissible.

Tex.—Wooten v. State, 4 S.W.2d 563, 109 Tex.Cr. 325.

(15) Evidence that proceeds of note were used in paying bill incurred in work for which note was given was admissible in prosecution for grand theft in obtaining note.

Cal.—People v. Hand, 16 P.2d 156, 127 C.A. 484.

Evidence held admissible

(1) Agreement required by state banking department of directors of bank in which falsely uttered check was deposited that accused's paper should not become part of assets of bank without approval of department.

Iowa.—State v. McCutchan, 259 N.W. 23, 219 Iowa 1029.

(2) Evidence concerning respondent's dealings with third persons, so far as it tended to accomplish limited purpose of proving intent to defraud.

N.H.—State v. Skaff, 54 A.2d 155, 94 N.H. 402.

(3) Evidence of nonpayment of check.

Ala.—Caughlan v. State, 114 So. 280, 22 Ala.App. 220.

(4) Evidence of falsity of check.

Or.—State v. Robinson, 252 P. 951, 120 Or. 508.

(5) Evidence of the fact that accused told the complaining witness nothing whatever concerning his transaction with a third person to whom he had given a bill of sale of the car he represented as owning as security for a loan.

Nev.—State v. Bacha, 194 P. 1066, 44 Nev. 373.

(6) Permit to sell worthless stock at certain price per share, which was greatly below its represented value.

Cal.—People v. Burns, 16 P.2d 1015, 128 C.A. 226.

(7) Testimony that car for which bill of lading was issued was empty.

Tex.—Taylor v. State, 232 S.W. 525, 89 Tex.Cr. 618.

(8) In prosecution for filing false valuations of property destroyed by fire and items not destroyed, an inventory booklet, wherein items lost had been listed at instance of accused and which was filed along with proof of loss.

Or.—State v. Jaynes, 107 P.2d 528, 165 Or. 321.

(9) In prosecution for issuing fictitious checks, other postdated checks given as part of same transactions.

Cal.—People v. Alexander, 246 P. 147, 77 C.A. 231.

(10) In prosecution for obtaining a loan from a bank under false pretense that accused owned and possessed a certain number of hogs, where defendant admitted that he had only a part of the hogs at a certain time, his statement that he had sold "what hogs he had" bore on original criminal intent, and fact that hogs sold were mortgaged was ineffective to make the testimony concerning sale, otherwise competent, inadmissible.

Mo.—State v. Nienaber, 148 S.W.2d 1024, 347 Mo. 615.

(11) In prosecution for obtaining a school district warrant by false pretenses by president of board of education, who had handled finances of school district, evidence of testimony of certified public accountant concerning amounts paid out on account of bonds, notes and interest and amount which had become due and payable and that there was an excess of payments.

Mo.—State v. Brickey, 152 S.W.2d 1055, 348 Mo. 248.

(12) In prosecution for procuring money on false representation that it would be used in a business venture or the like, evidence of expenditures and gifts made by accused for merely personal purposes.

Cal.—People v. Crandall, 110 P.2d 682, 43 C.A.2d 238.

(13) In prosecution for selling ore taken from abandoned dumps as high grade ore by causing high grade gold and silver ore to be placed in samples, gold and silver content of which formed basis for payment for carload lots of ore, reports made by accused to treasury department which reports falsely stated that ore was newly mined ore.

Tex.—West v. State, 145 S.W.2d 580, 140 Tex.Cr. 493.

(14) In prosecution of contractor for receiving money, on false pretenses that material and labor claims on building constructed had been paid, building permit showing that accused had given prosecuting witness' address improperly thereon.

Cal.—People v. Pearson, 231 P. 612, 69 C.A. 524.

(15) After state has made out prima facie case of guilt, it may offer evidence, if relevant to question of intent, that prisoner committed other acts of false pretenses, where prosecutor was victim or other persons were victims of false pretenses and it may also be shown that accused committed other similar crimes so connected with crime charged that they would afford a fair inference that he intended to commit crime for which he was on trial.

Md.—MacEwen v. State, 71 A.2d 464, 194 Md. 492.

crime is, in general, admissible to show guilty intent;⁷⁰ and evidence of his acts and conduct at and after the commission of the crime is admissible as bearing on intent.⁷¹ Evidence of a secondary purpose of the criminal act, which purpose is lawful, is not admissible.⁷²

d. As to Reliance on Pretense

The general rules governing the admissibility of evidence control on the issue of reliance on the false pretense. The prosecutor may testify as to his reliance on the pretenses made.

The general rules governing the admissibility of evidence apply to evidence offered on the issue of whether prosecutor relied on the false pretense.⁷³ The prosecutor may testify that he was induced to part with the property by the false pretenses.⁷⁴

(16) Other evidence see 25 C.J. p 649 note 29 [a].

Evidence not admissible

(1) It is not error to exclude testimony of accused that after check issued without funds was dishonored and demand made on him for payment he was forced into bankruptcy. W.Va.—State v. Price, 97 S.E. 582, 83 W.Va. 71, 5 A.L.R. 1247.

(2) In prosecution for swindling by worthless check, where accused wrote dishonored check against deposit of another check drawn against a bank in another city before its collection, evidence that his bank previously notified accused that a foreign check was not subject to withdrawal until collected, was without probative value to show intent to write worthless check, since accused had a right to assume that if a deposit was not subject to check, his bank would so advise him.

Telephone conversation

Testimony, in prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses, involving sale of stock with respect to prior representations made over telephone was properly admitted. S.C.—State v. Gellis, supra.

71. S.C.—State v. Gellis, supra. 25 C.J. p 650 note 36.

Only purpose

Subsequent acts of drawer are of evidential value only in helping to establish the operative fact of fraudulent intent. Va.—Cook v. Commonwealth, 16 S.E. 2d 635, 178 Va. 251.

Financial statement

Signed financial statement which misrepresented accused's financial condition, given after procurement of additional loan, is admissible in prosecution for false representation in procurement of prior loan.

Iowa.—State v. Detloff, 205 N.W. 534, 201 Iowa 159.

To disprove intent

(1) In prosecution for obtaining indorsement to note by false pretense, evidence that accused confessed judgment on note and delivered property to indorser is admissible. N.C.—State v. Johnson, 142 S.E. 775, 195 N.C. 506.

(2) In prosecution for making, drawing, uttering, and delivering a check with intent to defraud, evidence as to fact that check was paid by accused within a day after delivery, although no defense to prosecution if he had necessary intention to defraud at time check was issued, would be admissible as tending to prove that there was no intention to defraud.

Utah.—State v. Scott, 140 P.2d 929, 105 Utah 31.

Evidence held inadmissible

(1) In prosecution for issuing fictitious checks, complaining witness' testimony that accused had telephoned her to hold check as he could pay cash was properly stricken as not tending to show honest intent.

Cal.—People v. Alexander, 246 P. 147, 77 C.A. 231.

(2) In prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses, when accused in mortgaging his property misrepresented his title thereto, evidence tending to show accused's intention to make payments on indebtedness at a time subsequent to transaction was inadmissible.

Ala.—Cook v. State, 104 So. 837, 20 Ala.App. 622, certiorari denied Ex parte Cook, 104 So. 838, 213 Ala. 328.

Evidence held admissible

(1) In prosecution for obtaining money by false pretense that check of corporation was not for money due stockholder whose interest in corporation's deposit had been attached, testimony as to stockholder's indebtedness to bank and value of collateral pledged to secure it was proper.

Md.—Deibert v. State, 133 A. 847, 150 Md. 687.

(2) In bad check prosecution, evidence that the person swindled did not know that the entries in accused's bank book shown to him were forged is admissible.

Tex.—Palmer v. State, 245 S.W. 238, 92 Tex.Cr. 640.

(3) In prosecution for false pretenses in obtaining state relief, testimony of accused's wife pertaining to her conversation with case worker of state relief administration when he called to verify information given by accused, and testimony of accused as to conversation with employee at state relief administration headquarters when he filled out application were admissible for purpose of showing whether relief administrator relied on written information given in application or on other representations, or on independent investigation of his own, in making relief payments.

Cal.—People v. Miles, 99 P.2d 551, 37 C.A.2d 373.

74. Cal.—People v. Moore, 191 P. 980, 48 C.A. 245.

25 C.J. p 650 note 39.

Representative or agent

(1) Persons authorized to act for commonwealth may testify as to effect of false representations on their official action.

Mass.—Commonwealth v. Jacobson, 157 N.E. 583, 260 Mass. 311.

(2) In prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses by assignment to finance company of false conditional sales contract, testimony of secretary of finance company that in accepting the financing papers he relied on them as being genuine was material and competent although they were connected with an earlier promise that the contracts which accused would in the future send to finance company would be as they appeared on their face.

Iowa.—State v. Peck, 291 N.W. 439, 228 Iowa 1061.

(3) In prosecution for selling forged automobile sale contract, sustaining objection to cross-examination of purchaser's agent whose duty was merely clerical, seeking to show whether purchaser of alleged forged conditional sale contract relied on false representations, held proper. Cal.—People v. Cordish, 294 P. 456, 110 C.A. 486.

Representations securing payment from county

In swindling prosecution, testimony of members of commissioners' court that they would not have approved accused's report of right of way purchase had they known that not all the money paid out would be used therefor was not erroneous, although order approving accused's report had not been set aside. Tex.—Mowrey v. State, 55 S.W.2d 816, 122 Tex.Cr. 456.

Cross-examination

Cross-examination of complaining witness as to whether he made independent investigation of the matters represented, and as to whether he did not rely on such investigation, irrespective of accused's statements, is permissible. Cal.—People v. Daniels, 222 P. 387, 64 C.A. 514.

a. In General

The evidence must be sufficient to establish the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt.

In accordance with the rule as to crimes generally, in order to convict one of obtaining property by false pretenses or the like the jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of his guilt;⁷⁵ and it has been said that the courts hold the prosecu-

to the safety of the person or the property of the citizen.⁷⁶

In general the testimony of a single witness may suffice as evidence on which to found a verdict.⁷⁷ Direct evidence is not necessary; circumstantial evidence is sufficient,⁷⁸ provided it excludes every reasonable hypothesis save that of accused's guilt.⁷⁹ It is not sufficient to prove accused guilty of such acts and fraudulent practices only as would subject him to liability in a civil action.⁸⁰ Under the general rule in criminal prosecutions as to the proof requisite to establish the corpus delicti, considered in

Criminal Law § 916 b, extrajudicial admissions, declarations, or confessions of accused are not of themselves sufficient to establish the essential elements of the offense.⁸¹ Evidence which shows only intent and preparation is insufficient to sustain a conviction for an attempt to obtain money by false pretenses.⁸²

On preliminary hearing. On the preliminary hearing the state, in order that accused may be legally bound over and held for trial, is not required to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that accused com-

Necessity for circumstantial evidence

Where direct evidence is available there is no need to resort to circumstantial evidence.

Tex.—Taylor v. State, 232 S.W. 525, 89 Tex.Cr. 618.

Conviction on general principles improper

In prosecution for larceny in collection of expense accounts under information containing twenty-two counts, conviction on counts as to which there was no direct evidence and on which jury apparently found defendant guilty on general principles after finding him guilty on other counts was unauthorized.

Wash.—State v. Dodd, 74 P.2d 497, 193 Wash. 26.

Concert of action

In prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses, where accused was alleged to have acted with two others, concert of action in the consummation of the offense could be established by circumstantial evidence.

Mo.—State v. Montgomery, 116 S.W. 2d 72.

Evidence held insufficient

Circumstantial evidence was insufficient to sustain conviction of television repairman who allegedly cheated and swindled television set owner by placing parts which were not needed in the television set and making charges therefor to the owner.

Circumstantial or direct evidence

(1) Where direct evidence is available it is not necessary to resort to circumstantial evidence.

Tex.—Taylor v. State, 232 S.W. 525, 89 Tex.Cr. 618.

(2) Implied agreement to take postdated checks or to redeposit checks not paid when first presented avoids statute against issuing checks without sufficient funds, and may be shown by circumstances and course of conduct.

U.S.—Seaboard Oil Co. v. Cunningham, C.C.A.Fla., 51 F.2d 321, certiorari denied 52 S.Ct. 35, 284 U.S. 657, 76 L.Ed. 557.

Denial of memory

Denial of recollection of conversation in which alleged false representation was made was not denial that false representation was made.

Cal.—People v. Fisher, 2 P.2d 564, 116 C.A. 243.

Bad check as sufficient representation

In prosecution for swindling by giving check without sufficient funds or credit, it is not necessary for the state to prove that some false or fraudulent representation was made by accused, it being sufficient to show that he gave a check when without funds in the bank on which it was drawn and without good reason to believe that it would be paid.

Tex.—McGinty v. State, 245 S.W. 924, 93 Tex.Cr. 160.

(2) Complaining witness is held corroborated by similar representation to another, accused's admissions, conduct in face of accusatory statements, and evasive, contradictory, and impeached testimony.

Cal.—People v. Fisher, 2 P.2d 564, 116 C.A. 243.

(3) Corroborative evidence need only tend to connect accused with offenses charged, and circumstances connected with transactions and the entire conduct of accused are proper matters for consideration of jury and may be looked to to furnish corroborative evidence.

Cal.—People v. Andrews, App., 332 P. 2d 408.

(4) In prosecution for grand theft by obtaining money by false pretenses, in absence of showing that certain person, who might be expected to support accused's views, had knowledge that would have thrown light on whether representations had been made, accused's failure to call such person as a witness could not be considered corroboration of state's evidence as to the representations.

Evidence considered

(1) All of the circumstances may be considered.

Cal.—People v. Perrin, 227 P. 924, 67 C.A. 612.

(2) The acts of accused at the time of, and following the commission of, the offense may constitute proof of the falsity of the representations.

Cal.—People v. Perrin, supra.

(3) Formal presentation of check to bank is not necessary to establish want of funds or that check will not be paid, since it may be shown by more direct testimony.

Wash.—State v. Stevens, 237 P. 723, 135 Wash. 361.

Prima facie evidence

(1) Testimony that person whose name was signed to check had neither account nor credit with bank on which it was drawn is prima facie evidence of fictitious character of check.

Cal.—People v. Schneider, 98 P.2d 215, 36 C.A.2d 292—People v. Menne, 41 P.2d 383, 4 C.A.2d 91—People v. Roche, 241 P. 279, 74 C.A. 556—People v. Thal, 214 P. 296, 61 C.A. 48.

(2) Testimony of officer that person named as drawer of check could not be found in place where accused stated he lived, was held prima facie to establish that no person of that name existed.

Cal.—People v. Roche, 241 P. 279, 74 C.A. 556.

(3) Word "presentation," in statute, declaring return of check, not paid on presentation, prima facie evidence, means only presentation for payment to bank on which check was drawn.

Tex.—Fortune v. State, 66 S.W.2d 304, 125 Tex.Cr. 11.

(4) In prosecution for obtaining a county warrant payable to order of a certain party by false pretense that such party had sold or furnished lumber to the county or that county was indebted to such party for lumber, evidence presented by state tending to show that accused did falsely pretend to court of county commissioners that certain party had sold or furnished lumber to county or that county was indebted to such party for lumber in a certain amount or value, and by means of such false pretenses obtained from county a check or warrant drawn on the gasoline fund payable to order of such party, as charged in indictment, sufficiently made out a prima facie case against accused.

Ala.—Littlefield v. State, 63 So.2d 565, 36 Ala.App. 507, certiorari denied 63 So.2d 573, 258 Ala. 532.

Evidence held sufficient to support inference

(1) From the fact that a month after the making of the representation that an oil well derrick had been, or was being, erected on the land, there was no derrick thereon or evidence of the construction of one, the jury were entitled to infer that no erection had been made or commenced.

Cal.—People v. Woods, 213 P. 951, 190 C. 513.

evidence establish such facts as tend legitimately to show its falsity;⁹⁰ and since accused is usually in a position to know the truth or falsity of the representation, slight evidence of its falsity is sufficient for a conviction, in the absence of countervailing evidence of its truth.⁹¹

c. As to Intent to Defraud and Knowledge of Falsity

The intent to defraud and knowledge of the falsity of the pretense must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, but they may be shown by circumstantial evidence.

The fraudulent intent of accused must be shown by the state beyond a reasonable doubt.⁹² It need

Fair and natural tendency

The falsity of the alleged pretense or misrepresentation may be established by proof of any fact having a fair and natural tendency to prove that the alleged statements and representations were not true and that accused knew it.

Iowa.—State v. La Vere, 191 N.W. 93, 194 Iowa 1373.

Evidence held insufficient

Failure of accused to begin work on construction of house was not of itself evidence of the falsity of pretense, charged in indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses, that he had sufficient finances, materials, and labor available immediately to commence construction of house.

Presumption of intent from issuance of check without sufficient funds see supra § 50.

Subject of evidence

Intent to defraud is the subject of evidence in same manner and to same extent, and depends on same general rules of procedure, as any other necessary fact in the case.

Cal.—People v. Oster, 278 P.2d 39, 129 C.A.2d 688—People v. Gaines, 234 P.2d 702, 106 C.A.2d 176.

Statutory presumption or prima facie case

(1) The jury are entitled to consider statutory presumption that the giving of a check, draft, or order, payment of which is refused by the drawee because of lack of funds or credit, shall be presumptive evidence of intent to defraud.

Neb.—Haines v. State, 281 N.W. 860, 135 Neb. 433.

(2) Presumption under statute, providing that fact that payment on check, draft, or written order when presented in usual course of business shall be refused by bank, person or corporation on which it is drawn, shall be material and competent evidence of lack of funds in prosecution under false check statute, may be overcome by showing that, without accused's knowledge, bank applied funds of defendant on some indebtedness owing to bank, or that his account had been sequestered by legal proceedings, or that a check or draft deposited by him had been unpaid and so charged back.

Iowa.—State v. Lansman, 60 N.W.2d 815, 245 Iowa 102.

(3) Statutory presumption is not rebutted by showing, either by state or by accused, that there were sufficient funds in bank to pay check at time it was written.

Iowa.—State v. Lansman, supra.

(4) Proof that accused gave another authority to deliver checks signed by accused to any seller as consideration for automobiles purchased jointly for accused and such other, and that bank on which checks were drawn refused payment for insufficient funds, made out a prima facie case of intent to defraud under statute which in absence of other evidence, would authorize judge sitting without a jury to find accused guilty.

Ga.—Minich v. State, 47 S.E.2d 920, 77 Ga.App. 157.

(5) In prosecution for acquiring automobile with intent to defraud by giving check on a certain bank, where owner of automobile proved directly that accused had no account with bank on which check was drawn, and hence prosecution did not rely on presumptions arising by reason of nonpayment of check after presentation for payment, proof of presentment of check for payment was not required.

Tex.—Watson v. State, 229 S.W.2d 621, 154 Tex.Cr. 616.

Ind.—Huffman v. State, 185 N.E. 131, 205 Ind. 75.

Proof necessary to make prima facie case

In prosecution for feloniously uttering a check with intent to defraud payee, in order to make a prima facie showing of fraudulent intent it is necessary for state to show that accused uttered the check and that he knew at the time that he had neither funds nor credit with the drawee to pay check in full.

Wyo.—State v. Posey, 314 P.2d 833.

General intent insufficient

Iowa.—State v. Comes, 62 N.W.2d 753, 245 Iowa 485—State v. Huckins, 234 N.W. 554, 212 Iowa 283.

Time of intent

In prosecution for drawing check without sufficient funds in bank for payment thereof state must prove facts from which intent to defraud when check was given is deducible beyond reasonable doubt to justify conviction.

Tex.—Kuykendall v. State, 160 S.W. 2d 525, 143 Tex.Cr. 607.

Persuasive evidence

Although notice of nonpayment of a check is not essential to prosecution for delivering a check with intent to defraud, in all cases, and prosecution might be had prior to expiration of ten days after such a notice, fact that the statute allows a period of ten days following notice of nonpayment of a check for maker to pay holder amount due in order for delivery of check and nonpayment to be prima facie evidence of intent to defraud and of knowledge of insufficient funds, is persuasive in determining sufficiency of evidence to sustain a conviction.

(3) Gravamen of offense of passing worthless check is intent to defraud, which must be determined from all evidence adduced and submitted.

Ala.—Coggins v. State, 125 So. 201, 23 Ala.App. 332.

Inference from other elements of crime

(1) Proof of the other elements of the crime is sufficient to justify an inference that an intent to defraud existed.

Wis.—State v. Hintz, 229 N.W. 54, 200 Wis. 636.

Evidence negating intent

In prosecution against mortgagor for obtaining money under false pretenses, evidence that he had cultivated the land and had paid existing mortgage, taxes, and drainage assessments thereon, together with interest on the loan, tended to negative but not to rebut completely the inference of intent to defraud arising from proof of the other elements of the crime.

Wis.—State v. Hintz, 229 N.W. 54, 200 Wis. 636.

Unqualified statement

Unqualified statement, for purpose of being acted on, of existence of fact is evidence of intent to defraud. Iowa.—State v. Huckins, 234 N.W. 554, 212 Iowa 283.

Evidence held insufficient

That Indianapolis grocer charged with having by false pretense obtained Center township trustee's signature to a certificate of correctness of a certain pretended claim in writing against township was friendly with trustee, had luncheon with him frequently, and saw him every day, required no imputation of fraud, particularly where trustee's own testimony as a witness for the state disclosed no acquaintance with any facts on which fraud was predicated. Mo.—State v. Scott, 230 S.W.2d 764, 25 C.J. p 652 note 53.

Reasonable explanation must be overcome

In prosecution against county engineer for obtaining money by false pretenses by approving bridge contractor's excessive account, where accused was not required to know of his own knowledge what materials went into bridge and there was no direct evidence of his knowledge of falsity of account, accused's claim that he relied on written statement of foreman held reasonable, requiring such claim to be overcome by inconsistent circumstances.

S.D.—State v. Egbert, 258 N.W. 283, 63 S.D. 324.

Statutory presumption; prima facie evidence

(1) The jury are entitled to consider the statutory presumption that the giving of a check, draft, or order, payment of which is refused by the drawee because of lack of funds or credit, shall be presumptive evidence of knowledge of insufficient funds in, or credit with, such bank.

Neb.—Haines v. State, 281 N.W. 860, 135 Neb. 433.

(2) Under worthless check statute providing that introduction in evidence of any unpaid and dishonored check with drawee's refusal to pay stamped thereon shall be prima facie evidence of knowledge of insufficient funds in, or on credit with, such drawer, the prima facie presumption goes only to establish guilty knowledge and not corpus delicti of the crime.

Fla.—Shargaa v. State, 84 So.2d 42.

(3) Last portion of statutory provision that in prosecution as against maker or drawer of worthless check, the making, uttering, or delivering of check, payment of which is refused by drawee, because of lack of funds or credit, shall be prima facie evidence of intent to defraud, provided that maker or drawer shall not have paid the drawee thereof the amount due thereon, within five days after receiving notice that such check has not been paid by the drawee, has to do only with the evidence which is sufficient to make out a prima facie case of intent to defraud.

Mont.—State v. Zumwalt, 291 P.2d 257, 129 Mont. 529.

Presumption no substitute

Any presumption that in the ordinary course of banking business check drawn by accused and returned to payee unpaid had been presented to bank on which it was drawn and had been dishonored because accused had no funds in such bank could not be substituted for required proof that accused had no funds in bank on which check was drawn and knew that he had no funds in such bank. Mo.—State v. Scott, 230 S.W.2d 764.

Facts showing knowledge

(1) Refusal of drawee bank to pay check on account of insufficient funds is prima facie evidence of knowledge of insufficient funds.

Ala.—Padgett v. State, 131 So. 3, 24 Ala.App. 133.

(2) In prosecution under fraudulent circumstances,⁹⁸ including the opportunities which accused had to ascertain the facts.⁹⁹ To overcome the statutory presumption of fraud arising from the dishonor of a check for lack of funds or credit the evidence must tend to negative the intentional giving of a bad check.¹

d. As to Reliance on Pretense

lent check act, condition of drawer's account when check is issued is not conclusive as to knowledge of sufficiency of funds in, or credit with, drawee bank.

Ind.—Huffman v. State, 185 N.E. 131, 205 Ind. 75.

(3) In prosecution under fraudulent check act, where accused had in drawee bank, on day check in question was drawn, funds in greater amount, prima facie case held not established until state introduced evidence of other checks showing accused knew that he had insufficient funds or credits with drawee.

Ind.—Huffman v. State, supra.

(4) Where accused obtained a load of lumber from injured party for which he gave a check which was not paid by bank as accused did not at the time have on deposit in bank sufficient funds with which to pay check, facts showed prima facie case of guilty of offense charged in indictment under hot check law.

direct evidence of the prosecutor himself,³ but it may be inferred from the other facts and circumstances established in the case.⁴

e. Accomplishment of Fraud; Extent of Loss; Ownership and Value of Property Obtained

When necessary to sustain a conviction of the offense charged, the evidence must be sufficient to establish beyond a reasonable doubt the accomplishment of the fraud, loss or injury to the person defrauded, a transfer of possession or title to the property involved, the obtaining by the accused of at least a portion of the property involved, and the ownership and value of the property involved.

The commission of an actual fraud by means of the false pretenses charged must be shown by the state beyond a reasonable doubt.⁵ Although it is held in some jurisdictions that evidence is not insufficient to sustain a conviction because it fails to show that loss or damage was actually suffered by the prosecutor in the particular transaction involved,⁶ in others it is held that in order to sustain ship.¹² In a prosecution for securing by false pretenses a signature to a deed, oral testimony by the prosecuting witness that he and the other signers of the deed owned the land, which was admitted without objection, is sufficient proof of the title.¹³

cumstances, as where the amount involved or the value of the property obtained determines the character or degree of the crime, considered supra § 35, the value of the property obtained must be established by satisfactory evidence;¹⁴ and, where material, it may be established by circumstantial evidence.¹⁵

C. TRIAL, SENTENCE, AND PUNISHMENT

§ 53. Questions of Law and Fact

Questions of law are for the determination of the court and questions of fact are for the determination of the jury, or for the court where trial is without a jury, in prosecutions for obtaining property by false pretenses and in like prosecutions.

In accordance with the rule applicable in criminal cases generally, set forth in Criminal Law § 1118, questions of law are for the determination of the court.¹⁶ It is for the court to decide as to sufficiency of the indictment,¹⁷ the materiality or necessity of a particular allegation in the indictment,¹⁸ and the legal effect of undisputed matters.¹⁹

In accordance with the rule applicable in criminal cases generally, set forth in Criminal Law § 1120, questions of fact are for the determination of the jury,²⁰ or for the court when it sits without a

Evidence of debt

(1) In some jurisdictions it is held in accordance with express statutory provisions so providing that if the thing stolen consists of any evidence of debt, or other written instrument, the amount of money due thereon, or secured to be paid thereby, and remaining unsatisfied, or which in any contingency might be collected thereon, is the value of the thing stolen.

Cal.—People v. Leach, supra.

(2) In swindling prosecution for obtaining note by false representations, evidence held insufficient to prove value of note.

Tex.—Williams v. State, 43 S.W.2d 935, 119 Tex.Cr. 587.

Value of money

(1) When the object of the fraudulent representation is to acquire a sum of money, the presumption will be indulged, in the absence of averment to the contrary, that by the term money is meant United States money, and that under such circumstances no proof of the value of the money is required further than to designate the sum in dollars and cents.

Tex.—Raymond v. State, 33 S.W.2d 192, 116 Tex.Cr. 595.

(2) Proof that accused procured by means of fraud the sum of three hundred dollars in money, established fact that the "money" was circulating medium of the United States of that specified value.

Cal.—People v. Alba, 117 P.2d 63, 46 C.A.2d 859.

(3) Evidence that the money obtained was accepted by accused at the full value was sufficient to establish that it was of that actual value.

Cal.—People v. Alba, supra.

Evidence of amount held sufficient

(1) Evidence that injured person parted with fifty dollars relying on accused's representations that he would get barrel of Coca-Cola, whereas he received water, sustained conviction for swindling, in absence of evidence that barrel was of any value to injured person or that he did in fact receive barrel, reducing loss to less than fifty dollars.

Tex.—Jones v. State, 72 S.W.2d 260, 126 Tex.Cr. 469.

(2) Where articles alleged to have been wrongfully obtained by false pretenses were ostensibly bona fide purchases at retail in usual course of business, prima facie their value was the price at which sale was made, and further identification of goods for purpose of establishing value was not necessary.

What offense committed

In view of a statute providing that, whenever larceny, embezzlement, obtaining by false pretenses, or swindling is charged, a verdict of guilty of any one of these offenses is responsive, in a prosecution under an information charging embezzlement it was for the jury to determine whether the acts of accused, under the circumstances disclosed, constituted embezzlement, larceny, or obtaining by false pretenses, or swindling, under proper instructions by the court as to the law applicable. La.—State v. Ritchie, 136 So. 11, 172 La. 942.

Insanity of signer of check

Presenting to jury, in prosecution for issuing checks without sufficient funds, fact that accused's husband who signed check was insane, after jury.²¹ It is usually the province of the jury to determine whether or not the representations or pretenses as charged were made²² by accused,^{22.5} whether they were false,²³ whether accused knew of their falsity,²⁴ whether accused honestly believed them to be true,^{24.5} whether they were made with intent to defraud,²⁵ and whether they were relied on by the prosecutor so as to be the inducing cause of the transfer of the property.²⁶

It is usually held that whether the pretenses or representations were calculated to deceive is for the jury to determine,²⁷ unless they are in their nature so absurd and incredible that a conviction would not be sustained,²⁸ and there is authority for the view that, as a question of evidence, it is one of fact, but that, as a question of pleading, as, for example, on a motion to quash, the question is one of law,²⁹ but, according to some cases, the question is one of law for the court.³⁰ The materiality and influence of a false representation are questions for the jury,³¹ unless upon the face of the indictment the representation appears clearly to be immaterial.³²

It has been held or recognized that it is for the jury to determine what impression the words used by accused were intended to convey, and did convey,³³ and also whether certain representations were intended to be and were only statements of opinion or were statements of existing facts.³⁴ Under some circumstances, however, the question as to the meaning of the statement or representation and as to whether it constitutes a statement of fact or of opinion has apparently been regarded as one of law to be determined by the court,³⁵ and there is authority for the view that whether the representations made, as indicated by the evidence, are representations which are within the statute defining the offense, in view of the surrounding circumstances, is a legal question which is to be determined by the court.³⁶

In a jurisdiction in which the jury are judges both of the law and of the facts, the view has been expressed that, where the indictment contains counts for obtaining money by false pretenses and counts for larceny, it is for the jury to determine, on the evidence adduced, of which offense, if either, accused is guilty.³⁷

Matters of evidence. In accordance with rules applicable in criminal cases generally, stated in Criminal Law §§ 1138, 1139, the trial court determines as a legal question whether the evidence is sufficient to authorize submission of the case to the jury for determination,³⁸ but, where it has been determined by the court that evidence is admissible and sufficient to go to the jury, the question as to its weight and sufficiency to establish the facts or issues is for the jury,³⁹ and this rule includes the determination of the credibility of witnesses.⁴⁰

Questions which are usually questions for the determination of the jury may and should be submitted to the jury where the pertinent evidence is conflicting,⁴¹ where different inferences may be drawn

Demurrer to indictment

Court will not determine on demurrer to indictment whether the alleged pretense was a sufficient inducement when the other requirements exist, except that it will determine whether the alleged pretense appears on its face to have been frivolous, and, therefore, incapable of inducing one to part with his property.

Evidence of want of intent to defraud

Where the evidence introduced by the prosecution was sufficient to justify a finding of intent to defraud, evidence on behalf of accused tending to negative a guilty intent merely introduced into the case a set of conflicting circumstances and the question of intent was for the jury.

Issuing or uttering bad or fictitious check

(1) Question as to intent to defraud has been regarded as one for the jury under the evidence in various prosecutions for issuing or uttering checks in violation of statute.

(2) In prosecution for making and issuing a check without funds in the bank to pay it, defendant's denial of intent to defraud, which is a necessary ingredient of the offense under statute, raised an issue of fact for the jury.

(4) On a trial by the court sitting without a jury in a prosecution for fraudulently obtaining property by means of a bogus check, the question as to the intent of accused was one of fact for the court where the state made a prima facie case and accused presented evidence purporting to show want of intent to defraud.

On the other hand, where supporting evidence to Advising acquittal

In a case in which accused had been convicted of obtaining property by means of false pretenses and in which it was held that an assignment of error based on trial court's denial of motion to advise jury to return a verdict in favor of accused was without merit, the court said that it is never proper to advise the jury to acquit if the court believes that there is sufficient evidence to take the case to the jury.

Passing or issuing check

(1) Affirmative charge for accused in prosecution for passing worthless check was properly refused, where there was some evidence tending to establish charge.

Ala.—Coggins v. State, 125 So. 201, 23 Ala.App. 332.

(2) In such case accused was not entitled to an affirmative charge on the theory that the evidence did not show criminal intent, where the evidence was sufficient to satisfy a statutory provision as to what shall constitute prima facie evidence of intent to defraud.

Ala.—Nix v. State, 166 So. 716, 27

Ala.App. 94, certiorari denied 166 So. 719, 232 Ala. 53.

(3) The trial court properly denied accused's motion for a directed verdict in his favor in a prosecution for giving a check without sufficient funds in the bank to pay the check, where no evidence was offered to overcome the prima facie showing of intent to defraud which was made, in accordance with the statute, by proof of accused's failure to pay the amount of the check within the specified period after notice of nonpayment by the drawee.

Ark.—Brewer v. State, 112 S.W.2d 976, 195 Ark. 477.

(4) So it was held that, where the statute provided that the uttering and delivering of a check which is refused by the drawee shall be prima facie evidence of intent to defraud and knowledge of insufficient funds, it was held that it was not proper for the court to take the case from the jury by directing a verdict of not guilty, on the admission by the prosecuting attorney, in his opening statement, that the check was given for a past consideration.

Giving explanatory instruction

In a prosecution of one charged with the substantive felony of accessory before the fact to the crime of obtaining money and property by false pretenses, it was said that, in view of the surrounding circumstances it was possible that the jury would have been better informed if the court had given a charge or instruction, requested by counsel for accused, explaining a charge given by the court.

69. Ill.—People v. Emmel, 127 N.E. 53, 292 Ill. 477.

tive,⁷⁰ immaterial to the issues,⁷¹ or which do not state correctly the law applicable,⁷² which are not warranted by the evidence,⁷³ which exclude the consideration of relevant evidence,⁷⁴ which invade the province of the jury,⁷⁵ which assume the existence of facts in issue,⁷⁶ or which authorize the jury to find accused guilty notwithstanding there is a fatal variance between allegations of the indictment and the proof.⁷⁷

Where all the matters on which a prosecution is predicated are admitted by all parties to have occurred on a certain date, an instruction limiting the jury to what occurred on that date is not erroneous.⁷⁸ An instruction proffered for the purpose of preventing an inconsistent verdict, where the indictment contains charges of false pretenses in one count, and of separate and distinct charges in another, should be given.⁷⁹ On the trial of one charged with a violation of a statute, as to deceiving with regard to the existence of a lien, the court is not required to instruct the jury as to what is a valid lien.⁸⁰

Where the punishment depends on the value of the property obtained, the court should specifically instruct the jury as to the punishment they should assess.⁸¹ Accused is not entitled to have given an instruction as to the penalty under a particular statute where it is clear and not doubtful that another statute imposing a greater penalty is applicable to the prosecution.⁸²

b. Elements of Offense; Defenses

In prosecution for theft by false pretext of check based on alleged representation of accused to another that he could get criminal charge against him dismissed, wherein accused testified he cashed check for other person as an accommodation, testimony of accused authorized instruction that if accused cashed check for such other person or if jury had reasonable doubt thereof to find him not guilty, and refusal of court to give the requested instruction constituted reversible error.

Explanation of terms used

Where the word "dividends" was used in an indictment in different senses, it was improper for the court, in instructing as to the term with relation to alleged misrepresentations, to refer to the term only in the sense of dividends on corporate stock, without indicating the sense in which it was used; in reaching this conclusion the court said that "the term 'dividends' is not limited in its significance to the earnings on corporation stock, but is one of quite general meaning."

Cal.—People v. White, 259 P. 76, 81, 85 C.A. 241.

Instructions as to distinct statutes

Where each of two statutory provisions defined a crime committed by the fraudulent issuance or passage of a check, and one or both requested or given with regard to the elements of | the offense must state correctly the law applicable⁸⁴ statutes might have been violated by accused, it was proper to instruct the jury as to both statutes.

Wash.—State v. Lindsey, 61 P.2d 293, 187 Wash. 364, reversed on other grounds Lindsey v. State of Washington, 57 S.Ct. 797, 301 U.S. 397, 81 L.Ed. 1182.

Nature of misrepresentation

(1) Court committed error in failing to instruct that conviction must rest on misrepresentations of an existing fact, in view of statutory provision requiring the court to instruct the jury on all questions of law arising in a felony case.

Mo.—State v. Mullins, 237 S.W. 502.

(2) In prosecution for grand larceny based on obtaining property by false pretenses, refusal of requested instruction that a conviction could not be based on "intention" or on "a state of facts not then in existence," and that, to convict, jury must find that accused "falsely misrepresented an existing fact," was error.

N.Y.—People v. Karp, 81 N.E.2d 817, 298 N.Y. 213.

Necessity of corroboration

(1) In cases of grand theft involving the elements of obtaining money or property by false pretenses, the jury must be instructed as to requirements of Pen.Code § 1110 that, under certain circumstances, the false pretense must be proved by two witnesses or by one witness and corroborating circumstances.

Cal.—People v. Tennant, 88 P.2d 937, 32 C.A.2d 1—People v. Curran, 75 P.2d 1090, 24 C.A.2d 673—People v. Carter, 21 P.2d 129, 131 C.A. 177.

(2) The necessity for giving an instruction as to such requirements has been asserted notwithstanding one of the persons charged with the offense stated that he never had any intention of paying a promissory note which was given and signed by all the persons so charged on obtaining the property involved, since such note was genuine and did not constitute a "false token" accompanying the pretense within the meaning of the above mentioned section of the Penal Code.

Cal.—People v. Carter, supra.

(3) In prosecution for obtaining property under false pretenses, failure of trial judge to give instruction informing jury of subject matter of statute precluding conviction for obtaining property under false pretenses unless statement of a pretense is accompanied by use of a false token or writing, except by production of specified evidence, was prejudicial error.

Cal.—People v. Katcher, 217 P.2d 757, 97 C.A.2d 209.

Obtaining thing of value

Where the statute defining the offense, which referred to "any money, goods, or other property," contemplated, as an essential element of the offense, that the thing obtained by reason of false pretenses should be something of value, it was held that an instruction that it was necessary for the jury to find that the trust note obtained from the victim was the "property" of the latter advised them that they must find that it was something of value; in reaching this conclusion, the court quoted the definition of "property" found in Webster New Int. D., as follows: "The exclusive right to possess, enjoy, and dispose of, a thing; ownership; in a broad sense, any valuable right or interest considered primarily as a source or element of wealth."

Iowa.—State v. Evans, 295 N.W. 433, 229 Iowa 932.

"Scheme to defraud"

In prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses, where evidence showed a planned fraud, instruction was not erroneous because using the phrase "scheme to defraud," notwithstanding the word "scheme" did not appear in Code D.C.1929 tit 6 § 85, defining the offense; in this connection it was said that the statute is broad enough to cover a scheme to defraud and that a "scheme is a plan or design."

D.C.—Randle v. U. S., 113 F.2d 945, 72 App.D.C. 368, certiorari denied 61 S.Ct. 64, 311 U.S. 683, 85 L.Ed. 440.

Single instruction

Where the first instruction required the jury to find every essential fact necessary to constitute the offense with which accused was charged, it was not error to omit any further definition of the offense.

as to the necessity for the falsity of the pretense,⁸⁸ for accused's knowledge of the falsity of the pretense,⁸⁹ for the reliance by the owner on the pretense,⁹⁰ and for injury to the prosecutor;⁹¹ and instructions which permit the jury to render a verdict of guilty notwithstanding the nonexistence of an essential element of the offense are erroneous.⁹²

Instructions should be given as to the materiality of the pretenses where more than one was used,⁹³ and an instruction which authorizes conviction on proof of a misrepresentation as to an immaterial matter is erroneous.⁹⁴ Under some circumstances it is necessary and proper for the court to segregate false statements by accused as to existing facts from his statements amounting merely to future promises, in order that the jury may understand clearly what facts, if proved, would permit a conviction.⁹⁵

Instructions should be given as to a defense which negatives the existence of an essential element, where such defense is supported by evidence,⁹⁶ and, where such defense is supported by evidence, an instruction or charge is erroneous if it ignores such defense⁹⁷ or if it is so limited in scope as not to give accused the full benefit of his defense and of the supporting evidence.⁹⁸

No greater definiteness is necessary in an instruction as to an element of the offense than is required with respect to an allegation of an indictment in that regard.⁹⁹

Instructions based on a statute other than that on which the indictment is based and under which it may be upheld are erroneous.²

§ 55. Verdict

The general rules as to verdicts in criminal cases apply in prosecutions for obtaining property by false pretenses and in like prosecutions.

Rules as to verdicts in criminal cases generally, considered in Criminal Law §§ 1388-1416, apply in prosecutions for obtaining property by false pretenses and the like.³ The verdict must respond to the issues submitted to the jury,⁴ and should be consistent with the indictment or information⁵ and with the evidence.⁶

The verdict must contain, either in itself or by reference to the indictment, all the elements of the crime.⁷ A verdict of "guilty of drawing on insufficient account" is a general verdict, and is not defective for failure to state affirmatively the degree of the crime.^{7.5} A verdict which finds accused guilty of but one of several elements of an offense is insufficient.⁸

conviction is immaterial, if intent to convict of the crime charged is unmistakably expressed.⁹

A special verdict must embrace all the facts material to the determination of issues of fact raised by the pleadings; otherwise it is imperfect and void.¹⁰

Value of property obtained. In view of a statute making the extent of the punishment depend on the value of the property obtained, considered generally infra § 56, a statutory provision that the jury shall ascertain and declare in their verdict the value of the property obtained has been regarded as mandatory so that a verdict which does not declare the value of the property is not effective.¹¹ A verdict finding accused guilty as charged in the indictment and assessing the punishment has been regarded as sufficient, however, notwithstanding it contains no statement as to value, where the value of the property is stated in the indictment.¹²

§ 56. Sentence and Punishment

The sentence and punishment imposed must be in accord with the controlling statutes.

The punishment for obtaining property by false pretenses and the like is regulated by statutes which vary in their provisions.¹³ Under some statutes the

Besides providing for punishment of the offense by fine or imprisonment, under certain statutes defendant may be sentenced also to restore the property so fraudulently obtained if it can be done;¹⁹ and under other statutes, where the value of the property obtained is less than a specified amount, accused in addition to being liable to fine and imprisonment is liable to the person injured in the amount of damage sustained.²⁰

(1) "The counterfeiting or feigning of a signature, writing, or rubric, only when an attempt is made to imitate the signature, writing, or rubric of a person in order to induce another to accept the document as written, signed, or rubricated by the former. . . . Where the imitation is such that anyone would mistake it for the signature, writing, or rubric that was imitated, the crime of falsification is committed."

Philippine.—U. S. v. Austero, 14 Philippine 377, 380.

(2) It has been said that the fact that consent to a contract may be obtained by mistake, violence, intimidation, or fraud does not make the contract a false contract, and therefore a person who has obtained such contract by those means is not guilty of the crime of falsification either of a public or of a private document.

Philippine.—U. S. v. Milla, 4 Philippine 391.

It is described as a species of, but narrower than, "falsedad," for it does not include acts of omission.

FALSIFIER. One who falsifies or deceives, or gives to anything a deceptive appearance; a liar.⁴

FALSIFY. The word "falsify" is described as a word of double import in that it may be used to convey two distinct meanings; either that of being intentionally or knowingly untrue, made with intent to defraud, or the meaning of mistakenly and accidentally untrue.^{4,5} The word may be used with a third meaning, that is, not an accidental but an intentional untruth, without, however, an intent to defraud.^{4,10}

Primarily "falsify" means to counterfeit or forge; to give a false appearance to anything; to make something false;⁵ to make false by mutilation or addition; to tamper with, as to falsify a record or document.⁶

More specifically, in a different sense, to disprove, to prove to be false or erroneous;⁷ to prove a thing to be false,⁸ as an item in an account see Account Stated § 57; and also to avoid or defeat, spoken of verdicts, appeals, etc.;⁹ to reverse or avoid, as a verdict or judgment.¹⁰

For other references to specific uses of the term see 25 C.J. p 662 note 8.

Scope

The term applies to items in the account which are supposed to be wholly false or in part erroneous. S.C.—Kennedy v. Adickes, 15 S.E. 922, 923, 37 S.C. 174.

Characterizations or descriptions of maxim

(1) "An ancient maxim of the law of evidence."

Ohio.—Stoffer v. State, 15 Ohio St. 47, 54, 55, 86 Am.D. 470.

(2) The ancient and established maxim of the law of evidence.

Ala.—Corpus Juris cited in Fidelity-Phenix Fire Ins. Co. of New York v. Murphy, 166 So. 604, 608, 231 Ala. 680.

(3) The harsh "falsus in uno falsus in omnibus" rule which means no more at the present time than that jury may disbelieve a witness if the jury thinks that the witness is lying has little or no place in modern jurisprudence.

U.S.—Virginian Ry. Co. v. Armentrout, C.C.A.W.Va., 166 F.2d 400, 405, 4 A.L.R.2d 1064.

(4) Other similar statements see 25 C.J. p 662 note 18 [a].

Scope and effect of the maxim

(1) The maxim is a mere rule of evidence affirming a rebuttable presumption of fact, under which the jury considers all the evidence of the witness, other than that which is found to be false, and gives effect to so much of it, if any, as is relieved from the presumption against it and found to be true.

W.Va.—Levine Bros. v. Mantell, 111 S.E. 501, 504, 90 W.Va. 166.

(2) It deals only with the weight of evidence, and is not a positive rule of law.

R.I.—Dawson v. Bertolini, 38 A.2d 765, 768, 70 R.I. 325.

(3) The principle of the maxim is not an inflexible rule of evidence.

U.S.—Norfolk & W. Ry. Co. v. McKenzie, C.C.A.Ky., 116 F.2d 632, 635.

(4) It does not require rejection of testimony which is corroborated by that of another and credible witness.

D.C.—Lee Won Sing v. Cottone, 123 F.2d 169, 173, 74 App.D.C. 374.

(5) Rule held to be merely permissive, and not mandatory.

(6) It is not of universal application.

N.Y.—Seymour v. Fellows, 44 N.Y. Super. 124, 130.

(7) False statement, if the maxim is to be applied, must be made with respect to a material fact.

N.J.—State v. Sturchio, supra.

(8) The maxim, "falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus," does not incorporate a mandatory or compulsory principle.

N.J.—State v. Wesler, 59 A.2d 834, 837, 137 N.J.Law 311.

FAMILIA. Latin and Spanish; in Roman, in old English, and in Spanish law, a family or household,²⁹ although it has been said that in the civil law this term has a wider significance than the English word "family."³⁰

Familia emptor. In Roman law, an intermediate person who purchased the aggregate inheritance, when sold "per æs et libram," in the process of making a will under the Twelve Tables. He was merely a man of straw, transmitting the inheritance to the "hæres" proper.³¹

Familia erciscundæ. In Roman law, an action for the partition of the aggregate succession of a familia, where that devolved upon cohæredes; also applicable to enforce a contribution toward the necessary expenses incurred on the familia.³² The imprescriptibility of the action to demand the division of a succession is known in Roman law as "familia erciscundæ."³³

FAMILIAR. When applied to a knowledge of things, either mental or physical, the word means having an intimate knowledge, thoroughly versed, well-known, well knowing, or well understood,³⁴ and as employed in the phrase "familiar with," has been held equivalent to "know."³⁵

Used with reference to persons, it means closely acquainted with or intimate, well acquainted, or well-known.³⁶

FAMILIARES REGIS. Literally "Familiars of the king." Persons of the king's household, the ancient title of the "six clerks" of chancery in England.³⁷

FAMILIARITY. The state of being familiar, in any sense of that word; intimate knowledge, close or habitual acquaintance, free or unrestrained intercourse.³⁸ It is said to arise from long habit or daily intercourse, as distinguished from occasional intercourse, which gives rises to acquaintance, and unreserved intercourse which breeds intimacy.³⁹

It has been compared with, or distinguished from, "acquaintance" see the C.J.S. definition of that term, and "intimacy."⁴⁰

FAMILUS. A slave.⁴¹

FAMILY.

In General

It is said that the word "family" is derived from the Latin term "familia,"⁴² and also that it is derived from the Oscan word "famul" which signifies a slave,^{42.5} and it is generally recognized that the

30. Scope and development of the term

(1) Among the Romans it included not only all descendants of the same paterfamilias but all others of the household and subject to his power, such as clientes [dependents] and slaves. The same concept was carried into the early Spanish law and the head of the household was there called "paterfamilias" [padre de familias] although he had no children. Escribano Diccionario.

(2) "Familia" anciently signified the servants belonging to one master. Afterward, together with them, the wife and children, or what we from this word call a "family," of which the master was called "pater familias," the mistress "mater familias." S.C.—Pringle v. McPherson, 2 S.C.Eq. 524, 543.

(3) "The 'familia,' amongst the Romans was the body of household servants. They were called 'familiares,' and 'famuli' or 'famulæ,' men or maid servants [distinguishing them from] the 'servi,' who were by far the most considerable and were employed in husbandry and manufactures." Pa.—Ex parte Meason, 5 Binn. 167, 180.

(4) It included the whole of the slaves in a household.

Ill.—Race v. Oldridge, 90 Ill. 250, 252, 32 Am.R. 27.

(5) Also in Roman law it was the family right, the right or status of being the head of a family, or of exercising the "patria potestas" over others, which could belong only to a Roman citizen. Black L.D.

(6) In old English law, besides meaning a household, or the body of household servants, it also designated a quantity of land, otherwise called "mansa," sufficient to maintain one family. Black L.D.

(7) In Spanish law, a family, which might consist of domestics or servants; and it seems that even an unmarried man, owning negroes, might be the "head of a family," within the colonization laws of Coahuila and Texas. Black L.D., citing State v. Sullivan, 9 Tex. 156, 159.

original meaning of the term was a servant or slave.^{42.10}

While the word "family" may be said to have a well defined,⁴³ broad, and comprehensive meaning in general,⁴⁴ it is one of great flexibility and is capable of many different meanings according to the connection in which it is used,⁴⁵ its meaning not being sufficiently certain or defined to permit its use as descriptive of particular persons for some purposes,⁴⁶ although for other purposes the term is not considered to be so indefinite.^{46.5}

It may be considered as referring to a man's household at a particular period, or to his race or generation;⁴⁷ and so it may be of narrow or broad meaning as the intention of the parties using the word, or as the intention of the law using it, may be made to appear;⁴⁸ but unless the context manifests a different intention it is usually construed in its primary sense.⁴⁹

"In some of its uses the test for determining membership is found in the collective quality of the residence of the persons concerned and the unity of their domestic government and control. In those uses it is said to mean and embrace all the members of a collective body of persons living in one household and under one head and domestic government, and including servants and others as well as parents, children, and kin. . . . In other instances regard is had for relationship by blood or otherwise between the different members of the group, as well as to the unity of residence and domestic control. . . . In still other cases the factors of collectivity of residence and unity of headship are ignored, and that of relationship made to furnish the test of membership. . . . Again it is held that the term may be employed to designate individuals whom it is the right of its head to control and his . . . duty to support."

Primary Signification

—In General. In its ordinary and primary sense the word "family" signifies, embraces, or denotes a group of persons related to each other by marriage or blood, and living together under a single roof, and comprising a household whose head is usually the father or husband;^{49.10} a collection of persons as a single group, with one head, living together, a unit of permanent and domestic character, under one roof.⁵⁰

Thus, the term "family" is frequently defined as meaning, substantially, a collection, or the collective body, of persons living in one house, or under one head or manager,⁵¹ although this definition has been criticized,⁵² and it has been said that the term cannot be so limited and strait-jacketed as always to hold;⁵⁶ a household;⁵⁷ members of the domestic circle;⁵⁸ any group of persons constituting a distinct domestic or social body;⁵⁹ a household including parents, children, and servants, and, as the case may be, lodgers or boarders;⁶⁰ all persons who dwell together under a common head as a household;⁶¹ the personnel of the home.⁶²

Also, specifically applied, all the persons of the same blood living together in the household.⁶³

—Particular Elements Considered. In applying, construing, or discussing the foregoing definitions of the word "family" in its primary sense, it has been held that to constitute a "family" there must be

(1) a social status, (2) there must be a head who has a right, at least in a limited way, to direct and control those gathered into the household, and (3) this head must be obligated either legally or morally to support the other members, and (4) there must be a corresponding state of at least partial dependence of the other members for this support.^{63.5} The courts have considered these various elements.

Relation. "Family" conveys the notion of some relationship, by blood or otherwise;⁶⁴ and such relation must be of a permanent and domestic character,⁶⁵ rather than that of persons abiding temporarily together as strangers.⁶⁶

"We deduce from the authorities the following general rules to determine when the relation of a family, as contemplated by law, exists: 1. It is one of social status, not of mere contract. 2. Legal or moral obligation on the head to support the other members. 3. Corresponding state of dependence on the part of the other members for this support."

In legal contemplation, whomsoever it is the natural or moral duty of one to support or is dependent on him for support may be considered and treated as a member of his family,⁶⁷ if the other facts essential to the existence of the family relationship appear.⁶⁸ The term implies a relationship entered into in good faith,⁶⁹ a social status as distinguished from a contract relationship,⁷⁰ and mutual gratuitous services,⁷¹ but does not always imply the existence within the group of children⁷² or dependents;⁷³ and it has been said that a family, in its collective or aggregate capacity, can have no heirs.⁷⁴

Dependency. It has been said that the central thought underlying the family relation is that of dependency, and hence any number of persons more than one living together under the same roof, with some one of their number as head who controls the affairs of the household and upon whom the others or some of them are, by reason of some legal or moral obligation, dependent, may be said to be a family, and the person in control the head of that family.^{74.5} Thus, a family is not alone a collection of persons living together, but there must exist an obligation, either legal or moral, upon some one who thus occupies the position of head of the house to support the others or some of them, and on the part of such others a corresponding state of dependence.^{74.10}

Number. No definite number of persons is necessary to constitute a family when the term is used in its primary sense,⁷⁵ although generally a family does not consist of only one person,^{75.5} and usually there must be at least two persons.⁷⁶ Under particular circumstances, however, a single member may constitute a family,⁷⁷ as in the case of an only and surviving child⁷⁸ or of a surviving spouse.⁷⁹

Ultimate foundation of the state
"The family is the origin of all society and of all government. The happy family, well organized, and successfully discharging its functions, by strengthening the parents for the proper discharge of life's duties, while it fits the children to succeed to those duties, is the highest type of human goodness, and the surest source of human happiness. The whole frame of government and laws has been said to exist only to protect and support the family, so that it may develop and perfect the character of its members."

Federal decennial census

The Century dictionary devotes a column to defining families, and nowhere is it said that a family can consist of one person. That is also the definition in Webster's New International Dictionary, subject to one exception there stated as an exception: The Federal Government in its decennial census treats as a home and family one or more persons living there.

sary to constitute a family being present, under certain circumstances it is not essential that the persons actually reside together in one house or place,⁸⁰ except where this may be required by statute⁸¹ or by the intent or circumstances in connection with which the term is employed,⁸² and even where a living together is required the term does not negative the possibility that the head of the family may be called away at times and for temporary periods.⁸³

Restricted Sense

In a more restricted sense, the term has been defined as a group of persons consisting of father, mother, and children;⁸⁴ a collection of persons having association by reason of marriage,⁸⁵ including only parents and their children,⁸⁶ whether living together or not;⁸⁷ and the word "family" has been construed to include those who have left the father's home and have married and established their own homes.^{87.5}

In its most usual signification the word "family" denotes the group comprising the husband and wife and their dependent children,⁸⁸ constituting a fundamental unity in the organization of society;⁸⁹ but the term, as commonly understood, is not so limited,⁹⁰ and unless the context in which it is used manifests a different intention it is usually to be construed in its primary sense.⁹¹

Enlarged Sense

The word is frequently used in common speech without reference to any established household, but merely for the purpose of indicating the individuals related, as husband and wife or parents and children,⁹² and may be used to denote one's wife or husband together with lineal descendants.^{92.5}

In another sense the word "family" includes such persons as are descendants of a common ancestor,⁹³ all descended from a common stock,⁹⁴ those who have the blood of the ancestor;^{94.5} only the descendants of such ancestor, those who have his blood running in their veins,⁹⁵ it being said that its strict meaning, as thus used in this connection, is "children,"⁹⁶ and that this is the meaning that should be given it unless the context shows the term to have been used in a different sense.⁹⁷

In defining "domicile"

The word "family," as used in the section of the code defining "domicile," conveys the idea of the unity of the household in which are gathered the members of the family as one collective body under the management of the head thereof, or to which the head of the family, although called away by the demands of business at times, constantly returns or expects to return.

Nevertheless the term has been extended to include the issue of the ancestor's children,⁹⁸ all his descendants;⁹⁹ the whole group of persons thus related by blood,¹ sometimes in the broad sense of "relatives," including relatives by affinity as well as by blood.² In this sense, the word "family" is defined as meaning those who descend or are descended from one common progenitor;^{2,5} descendants of a common progenitor, as where we speak of one's family tree;³ the genealogical stock from which a man and those related to him by blood have sprung.⁴ Thus the term may mean tribe, race, or clan;^{4,5} persons of the same lineage.^{4,10}

It has been said that the word "family" does not always, or necessarily, imply a relationship by blood⁵ or marriage;⁶ and so the term may be used to signify a collection of persons living together in a home, though none of them be married;^{6,5} a master and slave, or two single men living together.^{6,10}

The word "family" may be used to denote a small select corps attached to an army chief, and has even been extended to whole sects, as in case of the Shakers.⁷

value not found in the article commonly used and not required by the use to which the ordinary article is commonly put.²⁴

In common speech the term is applied to an article which is out of the ordinary or it may be something which pleases not so much because of the qualities which make it useful as because of characteristics which appeal to the taste and to the fancy, and implies a value or characteristics not found in articles of simpler type.²⁵

It has been said to be the antonym of "common," "ordinary," "plain," and "staple."²⁶

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note.²⁷ Other phrases as to which more recent adjudications have not been found see 25 C.J. p 670 notes 67-76.

FANEGA. A Spanish dry measure of capacity equivalent to a little more than a bushel and a half.²⁸

As a land measure, "fanega" has been defined to mean as much ground as a fanega (measure) of wheat will serve to sow; it is generally considered equal to four hundred "estadales" (or spaces eleven Spanish feet) square.²⁹ It is also called a "fanegada" and has been said to equal five thousand five hundred square yards, or about an acre and a third.³⁰

FARM.

As a Noun

The word is derived from "feorme," an old Saxon word signifying "provisions,"⁴⁹ or "farme" or "ferme," called in Latin "firma."⁵⁰ Although the word, in its context, may have a very wide meaning,⁵¹ indefinite and ambiguous as to extent,⁵² yet it is said to have a well-defined meaning.⁵³

Some centuries ago the word "farm" had a meaning very different from the meaning it has today,^{53.5} and primitively it was used to signify that which was held by a tenant;⁵⁴ and at still earlier times the word was used as the equivalent of "rent," which meaning was naturally derived from the original meaning of the old Saxon word "feorme," namely, provisions, because the rent was paid in provisions produced on the land; and from the meaning "rent" it was a natural transition to have the word signify the very estate or lands rented;⁵⁵ and so it came to

In old English law, a lease of other things than land, as of imposts. There were several of these, such as "the sugar farm," "the silk farm," and farms of wines and currants, called "petty farms."

mean originally a lease or letting or farming out of land for a specified term and a fixed amount for these purposes; hence a large tract or portion of land taken by a lease under a yearly rent payable by the tenant, or a piece of land held under lease for the purpose of cultivation.⁵⁶

In more modern times the word has received a more extended signification, and now denotes, in this country, both in a popular and legal sense, a considerable tract of land, devoted, in part at least, to cultivation, with suitable buildings, and under the supervision of a single occupant, regardless of the nature or extent of his tenure,⁵⁷ and in the present day, both in England and the United States, a farm in its ordinary acceptation means any considerable tract of land, or a number of small tracts, devoted wholly or partially to agricultural purposes or pasturage of cattle.^{57.5}

The word "farm" is defined as meaning a body of land, usually under one ownership, devoted to agriculture, either to the raising of crops, or pasture, or both;⁵⁸ a considerable tract of land, cultivated or used in some one of the usually recognized ways of farming;⁵⁹ an indefinite quantity of land, some of which is cultivated,⁶⁰ whether it is large or small, isolated, or made up of many parcels,⁶¹ for a farm may be of any size, of any shape, of any boundaries, and may include less than one lot, or comprise several lots or parts of lots.⁶²

The term is further defined to mean a tract of land devoted to agricultural purposes,^{62.5} generally under the management of a tenant or owner;^{62.10} a tract of land devoted to agriculture, stock raising, or some allied industry;^{62.15} a parcel or tract of land

Described in detail

The popular connotation of a "farm" is a place of several acres where the owner or tenant resides, a substantial portion of which is devoted to the raising of crops, such as wheat, oats, hay, etc., and some vegetables, such as corn and beans, and generally accompanied by the breeding of certain animals such as pigs, cows, chickens, etc., the principal use of the produce being to maintain the farmer and his family, and only the excess being sold.

Similarly defined

(1) "A large tract used for cultivation or other purposes, as raising stock, whether hired or owned by the occupant, including a message with outbuildings, gardens, orchard, yard, etc."

Tex.—Gordon v. Buster, 257 S.W. 220, 221, 222, 113 Tex. 382.

(2) A tract of land devoted to general or special cultivation under a single control, whether that of its owner or of a tenant: as, a small consisting usually of grassland, meadow, pasture, tillage, and woodland, cultivated by one man, and usually owned by him in fee;⁶³ any parcel or group of parcels of land cultivated as a unit;^{63.5} one or more tracts of land devoted to agricultural purposes including the production of crops and the raising of domestic and other animals;⁶⁴ a tract of land used for raising crops or rearing animals;^{64.5} a tract devoted to cultivation under a single control, whether it be large or small, isolated or made up of many parcels;^{64.10} a tract of land under one control or forming a single property devoted to agriculture, stock raising, dairy produce, or some allied industry;^{64.15} a tract of ground cultivated or designed for cultivation by a farmer.⁶⁵

In a somewhat restrictive sense, the term is defined to mean a plot or tract of land devoted to the raising of domestic or other animals,⁶⁶ as a chicken farm⁶⁷ or a fox farm;^{67.5} a tract of land devoted to the breeding, grazing, shearing, and lambing of

The term is and has been a collective one, comprehending divers things collected together, whereof one is a message, and the others are the lands, meadows, pastures, woods, commons, and other things lying on or appertaining thereto.⁶⁹ Generally the word "farm" includes all the land which forms part of the tract,⁷⁰ and is not confined to inclosures.⁷¹

The word "farm" implies some tillage of the soil under natural conditions,^{71.5} and also implies cultivation of land for the purpose of production, or use in aid thereof.⁷²

It has been said that what constitutes a farm must differ under the particular statute considered, or the circumstances in the particular case.^{72.5} The word has a suggestive significance apart from any explicit or restrictive meaning, and even in a popular sense is applied to land used for any one of a variety of purposes,^{72.10} and it is generally recognized that

Ill.—National Accident Society of the City of New York v. Taylor, 42 Ill. App. 97, 102.

—Farming. In cases decided early in the century it has been stated that the use of the word "farming" in its purely agricultural sense is comparatively modern,⁸¹ and it also has been said that most of the judicial definitions have been evolved by the federal courts in construing the exemption, under the bankruptcy acts, from adjudication as an involuntary bankrupt,⁸² or by courts generally in applying workmen's compensation acts, and other statutes, from the operation of which farming and farm labor are exempted.⁸³

The dominant and distinguishing characteristic of this occupation, in both the popular and the legal senses of the term, is the cultivation of the soil for the production of crops therefrom,⁸⁴ implying the dealing with natural products of the soil in a natural manner rather than the artificial care of commodities under artificial conditions,⁸⁵ and that, as far as the character of the work is concerned, the activity connected therewith may be physical or mental or financial, including more than manual farm labor.⁸⁶

"Farming" is defined as the act or business of cultivating the land, the business of tilling the soil;⁸⁷ the business of cultivating land, or employing it for the purposes of husbandry;⁸⁸ the act of devoting land to the processes of agriculture;^{88.5} the cultivation and fertilization of the soil, as well as caring for and harvesting the crops;⁸⁹ the cultivation of land for the production of agricultural crops with incidental enterprises;⁹⁰ the act or business of cultivating and using the land and the soil thereof for production of crops for the use of man and animals and incidental purposes;^{90.5} the commercial production of any plant, even horticultural, or annual which has economic value;^{90.10} the operation of a farm.⁹¹

In a restricted sense, the word has been used as applying to the cultivation of large tracts of lands, but this is not always or necessarily so.⁹²

As an Adjective

Farm labor. In its generally accepted meaning, the term is defined as labor engaged in the production of hay, grain, vegetables, and the like by the tillage of the soil,⁴ and ordinarily it connotes the tilling of the soil, its products, and the raising and caring for such domestic animals as usually are found in those surroundings.^{4.5}

The term has been restricted in its application to work performed on a farm and connected with farm activities, the word "farm" being used in its ordinarily accepted sense.^{4.10} Work connected with a substantial commercial enterprise, separate and distinct from farming activity, is not "farm labor" even though it is performed on a farm.^{4.15}

By statute the term "farm labor" has been extended to include all service performed on a farm in connection with the raising, shearing, feeding, caring for, training, and management of live stock, bees, poultry, and fur-bearing animals and wild life.⁵

In the accompanying note examples are given of what, in particular connections, the term has been held to include and not to include.⁶

As used in workmen's compensation acts see Workmen's Compensation § 33.

Farm laborer. Defined generally as a man hired to work on a farm;⁷ a laborer employed in or about the business of farming;⁸ any man employed to work on a farm and to perform the work ordinarily done there;⁹ one who devotes his time to ordinary farm labor as a gainful occupation with some reasonable degree of regularity and continuity.¹⁰

While the work of a "farm laborer" consists of plowing, planting, harvesting, keeping machinery in its place and in repair, and a variety of other duties that are not performed by an industrial laborer,^{10.5} a "farm laborer's" duties are not confined to plowing, planting, and harvesting, but are extended to the great variety of routine work on the farm.¹¹

The term "farm laborer" has been held to include a horticultural or nursery laborer,^{11.5} an employee of a florist,^{11.10} a laborer in fruit growing,^{11.15} and an employee devoting his time exclusively to general farm work on an employer's dairy farm, notwithstanding the employer's major business is that of operating a milk pasteurizing and bottling plant.¹²

The term has been held not to include an employee of a florist who buys and sells nursery stock, none of which was raised or grown by him,^{12.5} and not to include a clerical worker at a milk distributing plant, a separate establishment from the farm operated by the employer.¹³

"Farm laborer" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "hired man"¹⁴ and "ranch laborer."¹⁵

It has been compared with, or distinguished from, "agricultural laborer"¹⁶ and "ranch laborer."¹⁷

As construed in workmen's compensation acts see Workmen's Compensation § 33.

Farm product. A term applicable to an article which is produced by the soil, either under cultivation or by nature, by labor or otherwise, and of spontaneous growth.¹⁸ While it has been said that the term applies only to such products of the land as are subject to the process of becoming ripe and of being cut, gathered, made, and laid up when ripe,¹⁹ the term is more broadly defined to mean any food-crop, cattle, hogs, poultry, dairy products, and other agricultural products designed to be used for food purposes.^{19.5} Under this definition the test is whether or not a particular item is a product of a farm, and whether or not it is designed for human consumption.^{19.10} Thus the term may embrace live stock^{19.15} or animals²⁰ such as cattle,^{20.5} horses, swine, sheep,^{20.10} and may also include poultry.^{20.15}

Articles produced on the farm

"The common parlance of the country, and the common practice of the country, have been to consider all those things as farming products or agricultural products which had the situs of their production upon the farm, and which were brought into condition for the uses of society by the labor of those engaged in agricultural pursuits, as contradistinguished from manufacturing or other industrial pursuits. The product of the dairy or the product of the poultry yard, while it does not come directly out of the soil, is necessarily connected with the soil and with those who are engaged in the culture of the soil."

farm and works at farm labor;^{27.5} one who directs for himself the management of a farm or farms owned or rented by him and works thereon at farm labor;²⁸ one who cultivates a farm either as owner or lessee; an agriculturist; a cultivator;²⁹ a husbandman;³⁰ one who owns and resides on a farm;^{30.5} the lessee of a farm.³¹

While there are many kinds of farmers and a particular definition may not fit every case,³² the term does imply that farming is the chief, even though not necessarily the only, occupation of the person.³³

Ordinarily a man is not considered to be a farmer unless he has a considerable tract of land and cultivates it or uses it in some one of the usually recognized ways of farming,^{33.5} and for a person to be a farmer more is required than the production of a few vegetables on a backyard lot.^{33.10} The mere fact that a person owns or resides on a farm does not, ipso facto, make him a farmer.^{33.15}

actually engaged in farming activities at the moment, provided there is a present intention to resume such occupation after the temporary suspension.³⁴ Furthermore, if an owner has acquired the status of a farmer through long years of personal participation in farming operations, he does not lose that status though his personal activities in connection with the farm have been reduced to a minimum through the infirmities of old age or illness.^{34.5}

A person may be a farmer even though his personal participation in the farming operations are remote, as where he exercises general supervision and control through an agent or overseer who is in immediate charge of the hired hands.^{34.10} It is not conclusive against the status of a person as a farmer that he no longer lives on the farm on which the operations are being conducted.^{34.15}

Persons held to be or not to be farmers, under particular circumstances, are listed in the footnote.³⁵

The term "farmer" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "agriculturist," "cultivator," "husbandman,"³⁶ "planter,"³⁷ and "tiller of the soil."³⁸

"Farmer" has been distinguished from "dealer" see the C.J.S. definition of that term, "herder,"³⁹ "laborer,"⁴⁰ "tiller of the soil,"⁴¹ and "tradesman."⁴²

As construed in the Bankruptcy Acts see Bankruptcy § 95, as to exemption from involuntary proceedings, and § 746, as to who entitled to offer an agricultural composition and extension.

In an entirely different sense, the term has been defined as one who assumes the collection of the public revenues, taxes, excise, etc., for a certain commission or percentage, as a farmer of the revenues; also, a farmer of other personal property as well as of revenue and lands.⁴³

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note.⁴⁴

Historical

Among the Romans the collection of revenue was farmed out, and the same system existed in France before the revolution of 1789; in England the excise taxes were farmed out, and thereby their evils were greatly aggravated. The farming of the excise was abolished in Scotland by the union, having been abandoned in England before that time. In all these cases the custom gave rise to great abuse and oppression of the people, and in France most of the farmers-general, as they were called, perished on the scaffold. Black L.D.

FASCIST. As a noun, a member of the Fascisti. As an adjective, of, pertaining to, sponsored by, or embodying the principles of the Fascisti. A political term which applied to one who believed in the ideology or philosophy of government known as fascism.^{54,50}

Fascism. A patriotic and anti-communistic movement which started in Italy during World War I and culminated in the virtual dictatorship of Signor Mussolini. The term is also applied to similar movements in other countries. Prior to the entry of the United States into World War II fascism was regarded as an ideology or philosophy of government, but the word has since acquired a sinister meaning and has come to be regarded as symbolic of race hatred in a most terrible form, concentration camps, oppression, barbarism, and cruelty.^{54,55}

FASIUS. In old English law, a faggot of wood.⁵⁵

FAST. When the word "fast" is employed as a noun it means abstinence from food, omission to take nourishment, a state of fasting.⁵⁶

When the word "fast" is used as an adjective or adverb it is descriptive of motion, and the meaning usually given to it is moving rapidly, quick in motion, rapid, or rapidly, swift, or swiftly;⁵⁷ but in this application it is a word of uncertain use in the absence of reference to some established rate of speed or some other criterion as to what is considered fast.⁵⁸

In a different sense, it means fixed in such a way as to prevent detachment, separation, removal, or escape; tight, secure, close, not loose or easily detachable;⁵⁹ and in this sense the word is said to be a relative term and is contrasted with "loose."⁶⁰

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note.⁶¹ Other phrases for which more recent adjudications have not been found see 25 C.J. p 675 notes 7-14.

FASTEN. To make fast; to attach or unite firmly;⁶² to secure in place by any physical means.^{62,5} or failing,⁹⁹ and, hence, in the language of the law and in the interpretation of statutes, it is held to signify a failure of duty;¹ and, in its various applications, it is said to have the meanings of bad faith or mismanagement.²

The word "fault" is variously defined as meaning a failure to do what is right;^{2.5} a defect, or blemish, or impairment of excellence;³ blame; censure;^{3.5} any deviation from prudence, rectitude, or duty;⁴ an error or defect of judgment or conduct;⁵ wrongdoing of a venial nature;^{5.5} error or mistake;⁶ a misdemeanor;^{6.5} failure of duty or misconduct;⁷ a moral transgression, a sin;^{7.5} any legal default, and not merely mismanagement;⁸ responsibility for wrongdoing or failure;^{8.5} neglect of duty;⁹ culpable cause;^{9.5} any shortcoming or neglect of care or performance resulting from inattention, incapacity, or perversity; a wrong tendency, course, or act;¹⁰ in the wrong; worthy of blame;¹¹ a moral failing less serious than a vice;^{11.5} wrongful act or default.¹²

The word "fault" may be used in the sense of failure or volition,^{12.5} and not as meaning something worthy of censure,^{12.10} or something blameworthy, culpable, or wrongful.^{12.15}

The term has been held to include a refusal to make payment when due,¹³ but not to include delay in delivery not involving a breach of contract,¹⁴ or a refusal to return to one's employment under conditions believed by him to endanger his safety.¹⁵

In the civil law "fault" means negligence, or want of care; an improper act or omission, injurious to another, and transpiring through negligence, rashness, or ignorance.¹⁶

Degrees

There are in law three degrees of faults, the gross, the slight, and the very slight fault. The gross fault is that which proceeds from inexcusable negligence or ignorance; it is considered as nearly equal to fraud. The slight fault is that want of care which a prudent man usually takes of his business. The very slight fault is that which is excusable, and for which no responsibility is incurred.

In English auction law, the word occurring in the conditions of sale may refer to the quantity as well as to the quality of the article purchased.¹⁷

"Fault" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "negligence" see Negligence § 1 a (7) (a), and "want of ordinary care;"¹⁸ and has been compared with, or distinguished from, "default" see the C.J.S. definition Default, and "error" see the C.J.S. definition "Error."

More fully discussed

The word is defined as fidelity, allegiance to the feudal lord of the manor, the feudal obligation resting on the tenant or vassal by which he was bound to be faithful and true to his lord, and render him obedience and service. This fealty was of two sorts: The one general, which was due from every subject to his prince; the other special, and required only of those who, in respect of their fee, were tied by this oath to their landlords.

Black L.D., citing 1 Blackstone Comm. p 367.

Condition of tenure

"Tenants by knights' service and also tenants in socage were required to take an oath of fealty to the king or others, their immediate lords; and fealty was one of the conditions of their tenure, the breach of which operated a forfeiture of their estates." Black L.D.

62.50. Under Hobbs Act

(1) In general

U.S.—U.S. v. Phillips, C.A.Cal., 577 F.2d 495, cert. den. 99 S.Ct. 107, 439 U.S. 831, 58 L.Ed.2d 125—U.S. v. Dozier, C.A.La., 672 F.2d 531, reh. den. 677 F.2d 113, cert. den. 103 S.Ct. 256, 459 U.S. 943, 74 L.Ed.2d 200—U.S. v. Murphy, C.A.7 (Ill.), 768 F.2d 1518.

Fla.—Shields v. Smith, App., 404 So.2d 1106.

(2) Force; violence or fear not elements in Hobbs Act case.

U.S.—U.S. v. Hathaway, C.A.Mass., 534 F.2d 386, cert. den. 97 S.Ct. 64, two cases 249 U.S. 819, 50 L.Ed.2d 79.

(3) Hobbs Act prosecution may lie where extorted payments are transferred to third parties, including political allies and political parties, rather than to public official who has acted under color of official right. U.S.—U.S. v. Margiotta, C.A.N.Y., 688 F.2d 108, cert. den. 103 S.Ct. 1891, 461 U.S. 913, 77 L.Ed.2d 282.

(4) Mere acceptance of benefits by public official is not "extortion under color of official right," even if official knew that his office was the motivation behind the giving of the benefits.

U.S.—U.S. v. O'Grady, C.A.N.Y., 742 F.2d 682.

(5) While Government is not required to prove that public official demanded or directly solicited benefits received, or that he offered a specific quid pro quo in exchange for benefits, Government must show that power of public office was misused in such a way as to induce the giving of benefits.

U.S.—U.S. v. O'Grady, C.A.N.Y., 742 F.2d 682.

63. U.S.—U.S. v. Adcock, C.A.Iowa, 558 F.2d 397, cert. den. 98 S.Ct. 395, 434 U.S. 921, 54 L.Ed.2d 277.

Test

In economic duress cases, causation issue is reduced to question of whether victim would have acquiesced in absence of wrongful threat; thus, factual finding that wrongful threat was communicated and understood is prerequisite for finding that threat was reason for victim's acquiescence.

When parents, or their agents, acting under the conviction that the judgmental capacity of their adult child is impaired, seek to extricate that child from what they reasonably believe to be a religious or pseudo-religious cult, and the child at some juncture assents to the actions in question, limitations upon the child's mobility do not constitute liberty-deprivations of personal liberty sufficient to support a judgment for false imprisonment.^{5,10}
